TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE.

IN presenting this translation of the first volume of Badāonī's Muntakha'u-t-tawārīkh (Selections from Histories) I cannot but be conscious of its many defects.

No one who has not attempted to translate from Persian into English can form the slightest idea of the special difficulties of the task.

The inherent differences of idiom in the two languages, the rich expansiveness of the one, and the rigid inflexibility of the other, render the attempt to fitly represent the glowing colours of Persian in the dull monotone of modern English, all but hopeless. It has been said that the test of a translation is not its literalness but its truth: that is to say, not its fidelity to the author's expression, but its response to his inspiration. It must not merely reproduce the letter, it must embody the spirit of the original composition.

How great is the demand thus made upon the translator must be evident to anyone who is acquainted with both Persian and English: and the difficulties which appear so formidable in prose translation, become insurmountable in the case of poetry.

The various metres of Persian poetry are so entirely characteristic and essential in their nature, that it has appeared to me futile, if not impertinent, to attempt similar metrical renderings in English.

Even where it is possible to reproduce by conjunction of English words, the rhythm and accent of any Persian metre, such a composition no more recalls the original, than does the skeleton of the anatomical museum summon up the living and breathing animal.

For this reason, the poetical portions of Badāonī's work have, in the present translation, almost without exception been rendered, not in verse but in prose, thus preserving the substance while sacrificing the form, as the transparent cube of salt may be crushed so as to be unrecognisable by its crystalline form, but still retains its chemical composition. To render poetry satisfactorily a translator must be both linguist and poet; if he be only a linguist he should not tamper with the finished work of the poet; he can, at best, only hope to outline the subject, leaving the colour scheme untouched.

I am aware that a high authority* has expressed himself in favour of the translation of Persian poetry into English verse, but the qualifications which shall render a translator competent to undertake such a task must fall to the lot of very few.

With this full knowledge of the difficulties to be encountered, the present translation was undertaken, and it is presented in the confidence that those who are the best judges of the nature of the task will be the first to make allowances for defects in its performance.

TRANSLATION

OF THE منتخب التواريخ OF AL-BADAONI.¹

IN THE NAME OF GOD THE COMPASSIONATE, THE MERCIFUL.

Oh thou² from whose name spring all other names,
Kings at thy door are suppliant as I at theirs—
When once the impulse of zeal for thee was felt,
No foot remained shod, no head remained crowned.

Emperor of the world! with this unprofitable soul of mine which has become the abode of demons and wild beasts,³ in what way can I conceive thy praises, and with this worn and foolish tongue of mine, which has become as it were food for cats and dogs, how can I chant thy eulogy.

How can the miserable dust proclaim the Unity of God.
How in this state of defilement praise the Divine Being.

Moreover, the root of search limps feebly in this unknown road, because of my constant anxiety and habitual fear, while in this limitless desert, my stammering tongue finds the sphere of speech always contracted.

That which my soul knows is but secondary,⁴ what my tongue speaks are but particles—(and therefore unintelligible).
How can I know thee in my soul or express thee with my tongue.

² This invocation is to the Almighty in whose name all literary works are commenced.

³ مَنْزِلٌ دَبُورٌ شَدِيدٌ

⁴ حَدُوثٌ That which is dependent for its existence upon some pre-existing state or object, opposed to حُرُوفٌ—قَدَمٌ Particles, which alone convey no intelligible meaning—حَرْفٌ also signifies a letter which is also per se meaningless.

2. This seems best, that I should restrain my pen from travelling in this valley, and having hidden the head of bewilderment in the cloke¹ of meditation on men and regions² should open the eye of my understanding to the knowledge of Thy all-perfect works and unfading kingdom, and proceeding, through the vicissitudes of affairs of created beings, to the Unity of thy exalted personality, should end with the world of proclaiming and confessing the Unity of God,³ so that I may see with the eye of certainty—nay more that I may recognize that and I have moistened my lips with the pure water of the praise of that chieftain whose name is “praised”⁵ whose end is lauded;

In thy excellence there is no room for duality,⁴ Thou and thy majesty make up the universe.

حَدُوثٌ زَمَانِي is of two kinds حَدُوثٌ 1 which is A thing's being preceded by non-existence, and حَدُوثٌ ذَاتِي which is A thing's being dependent upon another for its existence. Vide Lane, art حَدُوث. 1.

Vide Hughes, Dictionary of Islám Art, “Muḥammad.”

Lord of the promised fountain,¹ and of the praise which is on every tongue² (may the blessing and peace of God be upon him and his family) because the mantle of the honour of eternal and everlasting empire lies gracefully upon his noble figure, and the proclamation³ and stamp of undiminishing power and glorious sovereignty of right belongs to his exalted name.

of infidelity and the undergrowth of heresy from the plain of the kingdom of the sacred law.¹

3. After the praise of God and of the Lord the protector of the divine missive (may the blessing of God be upon him, his family and his companions, a blessing safe from all termination), we have to declare that the science of History is essentially a lofty science and an elegant branch of learning, because it is the fountain-head of the learning of the experienced, and the source of the experience of the learned and discriminating, and the writers of stories and biographies from the time of Adam to this present time in which we live, have completed reliable compositions and comprehensive works, and have proved the excellence thereof by proofs and demonstrations, but it must not be supposed that the reading and study of this science—as certain lukewarm religionists, and the party of doubt and dissent, shortsighted as they are, are wont to affirm—has been or will be a cause of wandering from the straight path of the illustrious law of Muḥammad (may the blessing and peace of God be upon him and his family), or become the entry into and way of ascent to the fountainheads of scepticism, and drinking places of defilement of the licentious and heretical, and those who have gone astray; because for a body of men who in the very essence of their constitution are devoid of any share in religious principle, the reading of the eternal word which is the key of evident happiness and “a healing and a mercy for the worlds,”² becomes a cause of misery

لِكُلِّ جَعَلْنَا مِنْكُمْ شَرْعَةً وَنَهْجًا¹ الشَّرْعُ. The sacred law. Cf. Qurán v. 52. For each one of you have we made a law and a pathway. The Mosaic law is always called التَّوْرَةُ At-Taurát (Hebrew תּוֹרָה.)

The word in the text is always used for the sacred canon of the Qurán الشَّرْع is divisible into five sections إِعْتِقَادَات beliefs—أَدَاب moralities—عِبَادَات devotions—مُعَامَلَات transactions—عُقُوبَات punishments. Cf. Kashsháf. Isti-lâhút-ul-Funún, art شَّرْع.—

and everlasting loss "and if they are not guided by it they say—
"this is an antiquated lie." ¹

If this is the case with the Qurán ² what chance has History?

"When any man has lost his hearing through melancholia,³
He cannot participate in the music of David and its harmony."

But I address my words to those who are endowed with the qualities of sound intellect and brilliancy of genius, and natural equity—not to those who are not led by the sacred law and who deny all principle, fundamental or derivative,⁴ because such men are not worthy of this discourse, nor are they within the pale of the wise, and discreet, and understanding, and how can one absolutely refuse to admit a science which is one-seventh of the 4.

² I have inserted these words as the only means of giving an adequate rendering of the phrase قَابِذُ رِيحٍ جَهَنَّمِ.

⁴ علم الفقه Jurisprudence. According to the Iṣṭiláḥát-ul-Funún علم الفقه treats of the soul and of all that appertains thereto, thus including all theological science; (Kashsháf Iṣṭiláḥát-ul-Funún art. فقه) cf. الأشباه والنظائر al Ashbáh wal Nazáir by Zainul Abídín bin Najím, (H. K. 774) الفقه اشرف العلوم قدراً..... واصوله ثابتة وفروعه ثابتة

seven sections ¹ upon which the foundation of the establishment of Faith and Certainty is laid.

"And all that we relate to thee of the tidings of the prophets with which we have established your hearts"² tells us of this, and a large body of the learned expositors of the traditions and commentators on the Qurán, as for example Imám Bukhárí ³ and Qází Baizáwí ⁴ up to our own times have occupied themselves in writing about this heart-enthraling science, and their words and practice have become an authority for the nations both East and West, in spite of the diversity of their origins and the distinction of their various degrees. While on the other hand an insignificant band of innovators and inventors who with the disgraceful partisanship of greedy mindedness and importunate desires, and shortsightedness as regards both outward and inward qualities, have placed their feet in the valley of audacity, and have introduced interpolations and errors into true and memorable histories, and having abandoned

مَثْنِي being plural of مَثْنِي repeating or reiterating. The number seven relates to the manzils or divisions of the Qurán each one of which is to be read so that the whole is completed in a week. See also Tafsir ul Baizáwí الم

² Qurán xi. 121. This quotation is correctly given.

³ Háfiz Abú'Abdullah Muḥammad ibn Abil Ḥasan Isma'íl ibn Ibráhím ibn-al-Mughair ibn-al-Ahnaf Yezdibah, or Yezdezbah according to Ibn Mákúla a Maula of the tribe of Jáfí. (Slane Ibn Khalliqán, ii. 595.) The last named was a Magian and died in that religion, his son Al Mughairat embraced Islám.

He was the author of صَحِيحُ الْبُخَارِيِّ Sahih-ul-Bukhárí, a collection of authentic traditions—in which an account of Imám Bukhárí is given. He was born A.H. 194 and died A.H. 256, and was buried at the village of Khartang near Samarqand leaving no male issue. The صَحِيحُ الْبُخَارِيِّ is held in great esteem by Muslims.

recognised constructions¹ and explanations, and interpretations of obvious nature, and estimating the conflicts and discussions of the noble companions and mighty followers (of the Prophet) by their own condition, attributed them to mutual contradiction and hatred, and to rivalry in the splendour and amount of their property and family, and having seduced simple minded people of elementary belief, have led them, by their own error and by attributing error to others, to Gehenna, the house of perdition.

“When the crow² becomes leader of a tribe, he will surely lead them along the path of destruction.”

And if the eye of a man be instilled with the collyrium of the Divine guidance, and illuminated by the light of truth, and guarded from every calamity which happens in the world of existence and evil, he passes to the Unity of the Creator, the Ancient of days, the Glorious, freed from the stain of innovation, and purified from the blemish of change and alteration. And when I look carefully, I see that the world is itself an ancient archetype which has neither head nor root, its pages are a confused record, and in each page there is a list of the affairs of a section of mankind who have had the reins of the management of affairs entrusted to their hands. 5

This ancient Sháhnáma relates the affairs of the kings of the world.

Do thou always look and read therein with circumspection.

¹ حَمَلَةٌ أَحْسَنَ مَحْمَلٍ is the plural from مَحْمَلٌ an inf. e.g. حَمَلَةٌ أَحْسَنَ مَحْمَلٍ.

He put the best construction upon it, namely a saying (Lane, s.v. حَمَلٌ.)

² عُرَابٌ The Arab proverb runs thus:

مَنْ يَكُونُ الْعُرَابُ لَهُ دَلِيلًا يَمُرُّ بِهِ عَلَى جِيفِ الْكَلْبِ

“He who has the crow for a guide will be led by it to the carcasses of dogs.”

The crow was considered as the most inauspicious thing on earth, thus the Arabs say أَشْأَمُ مِنَ الْعُرَابِ More ill-omened than a crow.

Its appearance is thought to be ominous of separation, therefore they say also عُرَابُ الْبَيْنِ The raven (or crow) of separation.

The spell of this narrative brings sweet sleep to him
Who is in delirium, and has become distracted with madness of the brain.

But it also wakens him who on account of pride, has fallen into the slumber of carelessness and whom the devil has deceived.

And inasmuch as the invoker of blessing upon all mankind, which, by the soul-inspiring order of that world-conquering Emperor whose throne is the heaven, one of the incomparable doctors of India had translated from the Hindí into Persian, yielded to a liking which he had for this science from youth to maturity, and as it was seldom that he had not been occupied in reading and writing it, either of his own free will and accord or in obedience to orders, it used often to occur to him to write as well an epitome of the affairs of the Emperors of the metropolis of Dehli, from the time of the commencement of Islám to the time of writing, in a concise manner,—

All the world is but a village that (city of Mecca) is the central point⁴ (of Islám).

might not be a book to be relied upon, or a notable composition, still in accordance with the saying —

“ These ancient pages of the sky whose beauty the stars are, 6.
Are an ancient history of many Emperors whose armies excel the stars in number,”

it may be that from the perusal of this book a messenger from the world of spirits and invisible mysteries may cast a ray of light upon the receptive mind, and thus being a cause of abstraction and seclusion, may wean the soul from the love of this transitory world, and may aid the compiler of these pages in the prosecution of his task, and his hopes may not be blighted ; and inasmuch as each day some new grief used to appear, and some vexatious annoyance used to shew itself, helps being few and hindrances many ; moreover by reason of fresh toils and temporal changes it was difficult to remain in one place.

“ Each day would bring a different place, each night a different roof.”

And besides all this, my sustenance was by no means assured, hanging as it were between heaven and earth, and my heart utterly distracted by separation from kindred and friends ; accordingly that commission was only accomplished by fits and starts,¹ until a kind and complaisant man of wealth, orthodox and religiously disposed, and happily furnished with this world's goods, who was very devoted to me, and for whom I too entertained an indescribable affection, having completed the writing of the *Tárikh-i Nizámí*² which is a bulky volume, and which is here being completed by me—removed the furniture of life to the sublime abode of Paradise.

The history referred to in the text is one of great repute and authority, it was called by the author Tabaqát-i-Akbar-sháhí by which title Badáoni himself also styles the work. Its name is also known as Tabaqát.

"He has departed—I too follow him.
Each one at last must go the self same way."

At this juncture, when Time departing from its usual custom, has treated me in the matter of leisure with some sort of liberality, it has come about that I have been able to steal a morsel of the chequered ¹ hours of my life from his grasp, so that I renewed my intention and confirmed my purpose, and on this ground that there is no bygone event which has not left something for the present,

"If the peasant thoroughly clears under the sheaves of wheat
He leaves the sparrow's portion on the ground,"

I have selected and transcribed accurately a portion of the circumstances of some of the autocrat Emperors of Hindustan from the *Tárikh i Mubárah Sháhí*² and the Nizámu-t-Tawárikh of Nizámí³ which is as it were a drop in the ocean and a bubble of the turbulent floods, and have also added somewhat of my own, and have kept before me the desirability of conciseness and have Nizámu-d-dín died in 1003 A. H., 1594 A. D. From the author's preface in the text above it would appear that he had had the work in hand some considerable time, but had not been able to give his undivided attention to it until after the death of Nizámu-d-dín. In the space of a year from that event he had completed his abridgment so that, it must have been fairly far advanced at the time of Nizámu-d-dín's decease.

3 This must be the work already referred to, i. e., the Tabaqát-i-Akbarí although the name Nizámu-t-Tawárikh does not appear to be given to it elsewhere.

The name Nizámu-t-Tawárikh is generally restricted to the work by Baizáwí (vide Elliott and Dowson II. pp. 252-253.) Its date is about 674 H. (1275 A. D.)

imposed upon myself the necessity of avoidance of all affectation of style and metaphor, and have named this model composition Muntakhabu-t-Tawárikh.¹ I hope that this imperfect collation and composition, whose object is the perpetuation of the auspicious names of the Emperors of Islám, and the transmission of a memorial thereof in this changing world until the final consummation, may lead to the pardon of the author in the world to come, and not be an augmentation of the crimes laid to his charge.

Since the object of my ambition is to write correctly, if I should by accident let fall from my pen the instrument of my thoughts, or commit in my thoughts, which are the motive agent of my pen, any slip or error, I hope that He (may He be glorified and exalted) in accordance with his universal mercy which is of old, will overlook and pardon it. 8.

¹ Abú Muḥammad al-Hajjáj was son of Yúsuf-ibn al Ḥakam ibn-‘Uqail ibn-Masúd ibn Aumir ibn Miattib ibn Málík ibn Ka‘b, ibn ‘Amr ibn Sa‘d ibn ‘Auf ibn Qassí (called also Šaqfí). He was governor of Irák and Khorásán for ‘Abdul Malik ibn Marwán (692-705 A.D.) and was confirmed in that office by Walíd ibn Abdul-Malik (705-715 A.D.) For an account of him see I. K. (Slane) I. 356 and seqq). He founded the city of Wásit between Basra and Kufa (75 A.H.) He died on 21st Ramazán A.H. 95, at the age of fifty-four and was buried at Wásit. Ibn Khalliqán states, “His malady was a cancer in the stomach for which he called in a physician, who, having examined into his case, tied a piece of meat to a string and passed it down his throat; after a lapse of some time he drew it out, and found a swarm of worms adhering to it: God gave also a cold ague power over him and although vases filled with lighted coals were placed around him so close as to scorch his skin he felt them not. (I.K. Slane loc. cit.).

He was a brutal ruler, and at his death it was said in thanksgiving “O my God! thou hast caused him to die: let his example also die from among us.”

“The tribe of Šaqfí was a great and well-known-tribe dwelling at Táif, who before their conversion to Islám were devoted to the special worship of the idol Lát; the founder of the tribe was Qássí (called also Šaqif) whose descent from Ma‘dd is supported by two different genealogies.” (Caussin de Perceval, Hist. des Arabes, i. 272). After refusing to hear the prophet in a personal appeal made to them, they made war against him, but eventually embraced Islám in 630 A.H., shortly after the return of Muḥammad to Medina.

The incident in the text relates to the vengeance taken for their father’s death by the two virgin daughters of Rájá Dáhir, who were taken captive when he was killed at the siege of the fort of Ráwar, 93 A. H. Muḥammad Qásim had sent them to Baghdád under the charge of his negro slaves.

When they were summoned before the Khalīfah Walīd ibn-Abdul Malik, he became enamoured of them and desired to retain them. They however assured him that Muḥammad Qāsim had kept them with himself for three days before sending them to the Khalīfah and that consequently they were not worthy to become his concubines. Walīd being very indignant wrote a letter commanding Muḥammad Qāsim at whatever place he might have arrived when he received the mandate, to suffer himself to be sewn up in a raw hide and sent to the Capital. Muḥammad Qāsim received the letter at "Udhāfar" (Oodypūr) obeyed its orders and was brought before the Khalīfah dead.

The Khalīfah taking a bunch of green myrtle in his hand, shewed the corpse to Dāhir's two daughters, who thereupon told him that they had falsely represented the facts in order to be revenged on the slayer of their father. They were accordingly by his order "enclosed between walls." (Elliott and Dowson, Vol. I, pp. 210, 211, Appendix 437, Ain-i-Akbari, Vol. II. 345, and footnote). Muḥammad Qāsim was succeeded in the sovereignty of Sind by the descendants of the Banū Tamīm Ansārī from whom it passed to the Sūmrā Rājputs.

On his death Subuktigīn, father of the great Maḥmūd, succeeded to the kingdom and it continued under the house of Ghaznī."

I have quoted this verbatim from Jarrett's translation of the Ain-i-Akbari Vol. II. p. 414, because it shews in a few words the changes which occurred during the period intervening between Muḥammad Qāsim and Subuktigīn.

Nāṣiru-d-din Subuktigīn is affirmed by historians to have been a Turk by descent who was brought by a merchant as a boy to Bukhāra where he was sold to Alptigīn, who from being governor of Khurāsān had by revolt against Manṣūr (A. H. 351) established his sovereignty over Ghaznī.

Subuktigīn some fifteen years later married the daughter of Alptigīn and was acknowledged king by the chief of Ghaznī, Alptigīn having died two years previously, during which period his son Abū Ishāq was governor till his death. He then became founder of the Ghaznivide Dynasty or the Kings of Lahore. (See Briggs Ferishta, Vol. I. pp. 11-96,) also (Elliott and Dowson, Vol. VI. 207-221.) came the seat of Government, so that Islám never again lost its hold on that country—accordingly I deemed it right to commence this history with an account of that monarch whose end was glorious, so that it may be fortunate from the first, and lauded at the last—and God is the best of helpers and defenders.

THE GHAZNIVIDE DYNASTY.

From Sultán Náṣiru-d-dín Subuktigín to Khusrau Malik, who, prior to the conquest of Dehli, proclaimed Islám in Hindustán, from the year 367 A.H. (977 A.D.), to the year 582 A.H. (1186 A.D.). Their sovereignty thus lasted two hundred and fifteen years under the sway of fifteen monarchs.

SULTÁN NÁṢIRU-D-DÍN SUBUKTIGÍN

Was of Turkí origin, the slave of Alptigín who was a servant of Amír Mansúr-ibn-Núh Sámání.¹ In the year 367 H. after the death of Abú Isháq, the son of Alptigín, by common consent of the soldiery and populace he succeeded² to the imperial throne in the city of Bust³ and raised the standard of conquest, and

The Sámání dynasty was founded by Asad bin-Sémán. It held sway over Khurásán and Transoxiana, holding its court at Bukhárá—from 279 A. H. to 395 A. H. See Tabaqát-i-Násiri, Raverty pp. 26, 27 and 53. Amír Abul Hirs Mansúr died at Bukhárá 366 A. H. and was succeeded by his son Abul Qásim-i-Núh. (Tabaqát-i-Násiri, Raverty 44.) For an account of the Sámání dynasty, see D'Herbelot III. 193. Abú Isháq was appointed by Mansúr as governor of Ghaznín upon the death of his father Alptigín in the year 365 A. H., and died in 367 A. H.

According to the Tabaqát-i-Násiri, Alptigín died in 352 A. H. and Isháq in 355 A. H. upon the death of Isháq Balkatigín, the slave of Alptigín succeeded him, dying in 362 A. H. after him again Pirey obtained the government, but was deposed in 367 A. H. when the Government passed to Subuktigín. (See Raverty Tabaqát-i-Násiri, pp. 71-73.)

girding up the loins of energy and effort for foray and religious war, he invaded Hindustán on the frontiers of the country of Koh-i-Júd¹ and having fought a severe battle with Jaipál who was the ruler of Hindustán, concluded peace with him. Jaipál, however, broke the treaty. Accordingly Náṣiru-d-dín Subuktigin equipped an army composed of 10,000 cavalry and numberless elephants huge as mountains, and engaged in conflict with him a second time, fought a great battle with him in the neighbourhood of Lamghánát,² the breeze of victory stirred the banners of Amír Náṣiru-d-dín, the army of Jaipál suffered defeat, and he himself took to flight and sought refuge in Hindustán. Thus Lamghánát came into the possession of Amír Náṣiru-d-dín, the Khutbah was read and the coin struck in his name.³ Then he proceeded to the assistance of Amír Núḥ-ibn-Manṣúr Sámání⁴ and was the means of procuring notable victories in Khurásán and the regions beyond the river.⁵ Finally in the month of Sha'bán⁶ of the year 387 A.H. (997 A.D.,) he obediently submitted to the summons of the Almighty, having reigned for twenty years. 9.

⁶ The eighth month of the Muhammadan year.

responded "Here am I," he appointed his young son Isma'il as his successor.¹ When this news reached Maḥmūd who was the elder son of Subuktigīn, he wrote a letter of condolence to his brother and sought a peaceful solution of the difficulty on the following terms: That Isma'il should give up Ghaznīn to Maḥmūd, receiving in its stead the governorship of Balkh: Isma'il refused these terms, and eventually war was declared between the brothers. Maḥmūd was victorious, and after defeating Isma'il, kept him closely besieged in Ghaznīn for a space of six months, at the expiration of which time certain of their friends intervened and made peace between them. Isma'il then came and had an interview with Maḥmūd, and the sovereignty devolved upon Yamīnu-d-Daulat Maḥmūd. After this a quarrel arose between Maḥmūd and Maṣūr ibn-Nūḥ Sāmānī and also his brother 'Abdu-l-Malik ibn-Nūḥ.² Eventually Maḥmūd got the upper hand. The Amīrs of 'Abdu-l-Malik also, Fáiq and Baktúzūn, who engaged in contest with Maḥmūd, were defeated by him, and the sovereignty of the whole of Khurāsān, of Ghaznīn, and the frontiers of Hindustān came into the hands of Maḥmūd.

Maḥmūd's mother was the daughter of the ruler of Zābul.³

² The origin of this quarrel is stated by Ferishta to have been a protest lodged by Maḥmūd against the nomination of Bak-Túzūn to the governorship of Khurāsān (see Briggs, p. 84, see also Raverty, Tabaqāt-i-Násirī, pp. 49, 50).

Maṣūr was deprived of his sight after dethronement by Fáiq and Bak-túzūn who then by agreement with Maḥmūd were to hold Merv and Nishápúr.

Shortly after this (in 388 A. H.), the Sāmānī dynasty came to an end after the defeat of Abd-ul-Malik by Ilák-i-Nasr. It had lasted one hundred and eight years. See Raverty, pp. 53, 54. (see also D. Herbelot iii. 194).

Maḥmūd is related to have assumed the title of Sultān and to have been the first Oriental potentate who appropriated this term (Thomas, Coins of Kings of Ghaznī, J. R. A. S. IX. 270. see also Elliott II. 480-481).

³ She was the daughter of Alptagīn, governor of Ghaznīn, which is here meant by Zābul, the words 'that is Qandahār' only occur in one copy and are probably interpolated.

[that is to say Qandahár*] accordingly, he is called Mahmúd Zábulí—as Firdausí¹ says:

The auspicious court of Mahmúd Zábulí is an ocean,
An ocean such that no shore can be found for it:
I went to the ocean—I dived but found no pearl
The fault is my fortune's—not that of the ocean.

In the early part of his reign he had some unpleasant correspondence with the Khalífah of Baghdád Al-Qádir billáhi 'Abbási.² Eventually the Khalif despatched a magnificent robe of honour, and many presents of precious things and gems, and conferred on him the title of Amíru-l-Millat Yamínu-d-Daulat.

Leaving Ghaznín he went to Balkh and Herát, and in 387 A.H., (997 A.D.) he returned to Ghaznín after having settled those provinces, and thence made repeated incursions and forays into Hindustán, and took several fortresses. 'Asjadí³ composed the following qaṣída in honour of this expedition:

When the king of kings marched to Somnát⁴
He made his own deeds the standard of miracles.

In the month of Shawwál, 391 A.H., (1000 A.D.) Mahmúd re- 11.

As Suyúṭi quoting from Al-Khatib says that he was distinguished for his rectitude and nobility of character. (History of Caliphs (Jarrett, p. 431.)

The qaṣída in which the lines quoted occur is given at length in the Majma'ul Fuṣahá, loc. cit. MS. (A) quotes them wrongly, MS. (B) is the same as the text which reads چون for ق. 'Asjadí was a celebrated poet of Merv. The Tabaqát-i-Násirí gives another couplet in addition to the above and attributes the poem to 'Ansuri (p. 82, note 1).

and reduced Pesháwar. He also again drew up his forces on these frontiers for battle with Jaipál who confronted him with large forces of cavalry and infantry and three hundred elephants. Sultán Maḥmúd gained the day and Jaipál was taken prisoner together with fifteen of his relatives, his brothers and his sons; and five thousand infidels fell by the sword. Great spoils fell into the hands of the Gházis, among them a pearl necklet which was on the neck of Jaipál, which was worth some hundred and eighty thousand dínárs,¹ and the necklets of the others too, on the same

There is some uncertainty as to the actual value of the Dínár, as there were different coins, one of silver and the other of gold bearing this name—

It was during the Khalífate of Abdul Malik ibn Marwán (A.H. 73 to A.H. 86, A.D. 692 A.D. 705) that a separate coinage was introduced. Thus As Suyúṭí gives the following account: "Yahyá-b-Bakayr narrates:— 'I heard Málik say that the first who coined dínárs was Abdul Malik and he inscribed on them a verse of the Qurán. Musa'b states that Abdul Malik inscribed on the dínár "Say, God is One." (Qur. cxii.) and on the reverse "there is no God but God;" and its circumference was a rim of silver and he inscribed outside the rim, "Muhammad is the Apostle of God, whom he hath sent as a guide unto Salvation and the true faith.'" (Jarrett, History of the Caliphs p. 222.)

Abdul Malik had introduced the custom of writing at the head of letters the formula, "say there is one God" This was a cause of offence to the Grecian Emperor who wrote saying that unless Abdul Malik abandoned this habit "there will reach you on our dínárs the mention of what you will not like." Abdul Malik consequently decided upon coining his own dínárs which he did in the year 75 A.H. (A.D. 694.)

The origin of the word dínár is attributed to the Latin denarius the words فلس fals and درهم dirham being in the same way derived from follis and drachma. (Prinsep I. 19-246.)

The denarius, a silver coin was worth approximately 8½d. its average weight being according to the authorities 60 grains. It was first coined B.C. 269.

Its relation to the drachma was at first as 8·5 to 9·75, but owing to a falling off in weight of the drachma they at one time were practically equal in value. The drachma was a silver coin and occupied among the Greeks the place of the denarius among the Romans. Both these coins then, the dínár and the dirham, were silver originally, and were in all probability of equal values, but there is another dínár mentioned in the Rajá Taranginí and elsewhere which was a gold coin—this answers almost exactly to the Roman denarius aureus of which Pliny speaks, the average weight of which was 120 grains. The gold coins of Chandragupta mentioned in the Sanchí inscription weigh from 120 to 130 grains and are indubitably copied from Greek originals in device as well as in weight. Prinsep I. 246.

scale. This victory was won on Saturday,¹ the 8th of Muharram, 392 H., (1001 A.D.) Leaving this place Mahmúd proceeded to the fortress of Tabarhindah² which was the residence³ of Jaipál, and conquered that country.

After this in the month of Muharram 393 A.H. he left Ghaznín and proceeded to Hindustán by way of Seistán and assaulted Bhátia⁴ which is in the vicinity of Multán. The Rájá of that place, Bejí Rái, fearing the punishment of the Sultán killed himself with a dagger, and they brought his head to the Sultán. Many Hindús, more than one can number, were hurried along the road to non-existence by the pitiless sword, and Mahmúd took as spoil two-hundred and seventy elephants while Dáúd ibn-Naṣr⁵ the renegade ruler of Multán, being reduced to submission by the Sultán, agreed to pay twenty times twenty thousand *dirhams*⁶ annual tribute.

We may thus take it that the golden dínár was double the weight of the silver dínár and taking the ratio of gold to silver as 10 to 1 this would give us the relative values of the gold and silver dínár in terms of dínárs of silver as 20 to 1.

This relative value is rendered more probable still by a comparison of our author's statement of the tribute paid by Dáúd ibn Naṣr (page 11, line 18 of the Text) with that of Firishta (see note 6 below).

Against this however is the statement in the Ain-i-Akbari (Stochmann I. p. 36) that "the Dínár is a gold coin weighing one miṣqál, i.e., 1½ dirhams" but as both the dirham and the miṣqál were variable the accuracy of this statement is open to question.

See Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. (Art.) Denarius.

² Tabarhindah. Firishta calls this Batindah which is also the name given to Jaipál's capital in a history of the Rájás of Jamú. As to the identity of this with Waihind, see Raverty's Tabaqát-i-Akbari, pp. 76-80 footnote; see Tieffenthaler's map, Vol. III. See also E. and D. II. 438.

⁶ Firishta says 20,000 golden dirams. According to the Ain-i-Akbari, Vol. I. 35, the dirham is a silver coin, and no mention is made of a golden dirham. Taking the value of the golden dirham at twenty times that of the silver dirham the text would give the same amount as that given by Firishta (see note 1 p. 18).

As he was advancing to Multán, Anandpál, son of Jaipál, rose up against him to oppose the advance of the Sultán, but fled after the battle to the mountains of Kashmir, and the Sultán reached
12. Multán by way of Hindustán.¹ Those events occurred in 396 A.H. (1005 A.D.) In the following year 397 A.H. (1006 A.D.) a battle was fought at Balkh between Maḥmúd and Ilak Khán² king of Máwará an-Nahr.³ Sultán Maḥmúd was victorious; Ilak Khán finally died in the year 403 H. (1012 A.D.)

In the year 398 H. (1007 A.D.) Maḥmúd entered Turkistán, and having settled the affairs of the Turkís, pursued Súkhpál⁴ Nabsa, Rájá of Sind (who having embraced Islám had been released from his captivity to Abú 'Alí Sinjúrí but had again joined the idolators and apostates) overcame him and threw him into prison where he died.

In the year 399 A.H. (1008 A.D.) Maḥmúd a second time entered Hindustán and engaging in battle with the aforesaid Anand Pál defeated him, and betaking himself with his vast spoil to the fortress of Bhímnagar⁵—which nowadays is known

In the year 402 H. (1011 A.D.), he set out for Thánesar⁴ and Jaipál, the son of the former Jaipál, offered him a present of fifty elephants and much treasure. The Sultán, however, was not to be deterred from his purpose; so refused to accept his present, and seeing Thánesar empty he sacked it and destroyed its idol temples, and took away to Ghaznīn, the idol known as Chakar- 13.

They sought to attain their ends by violence and in the year 319 H. under Abu Táher, took the city of Mecca with fearful slaughter, plundered the temple and took away the black stone which they retained for twenty years.

Tieffenthaler describes it as a large and populous town one mile in length, having a pond surrounded by buildings towards the east. The Hindus he states, claim that when gold is thrown into this lake it increases in weight. He naively, goes on to say, however, "Mais c'est un fable ridicule car celui qui y jette son or n'en recouvre rien." The water is accounted holy.

He places Thánesar at a distance of 66 miles from Dehli giving the stages.—Narela 12 miles, Sonpat 6, Gonor 6, Panipat 12, Carnal 14, Asamabad 7, Thanessor 9. It lies N.-W. of Dehli and is now called Thanoswar. See Cunningham, Anc. Geog. of India, pp. 330-332. See Alberuni, I. 199.

sōm,¹ on account of which the Hindús had been ruined; and having placed it in his court, caused it to be trampled under foot by the people. In the year 403 H. (1012 A.D.), he conquered Gharjistán,² and in the selfsame year an ambassador arrived from the ruler of Egypt, and when the Sultán heard that he was of the Bâtíní sect,³ he exposed him to public ridicule⁴ and expelled him.

In the year 404 H. (1013 A.D.), he prepared an expeditionary force to attack Nandana,⁵ a city situated on the mountains of Bálnáth. Jaipál II⁶ left a force to defend that fortress, and himself proceeded to the Kashmír pass. The Sultán gained possession of that fortress with promise of quarter, and left Sárégh Kotwál to defend it, while he pursued Jaipál. He took the vast spoils of that mountainous region and put many infidels to death by the sword of holy war, and honoured the rest by admitting them to Islám—a certain number he led captive to Ghaznín.

In the year 406 H. (1015 A.D.), he contemplated the conquest of Kashmír, and besieged the fortress of Lohar Kot,⁷ which was a very high fort, but was forced to abandon the siege on account of the severity of the cold and rain, and the constant reinforcements available to the Kashmírís, and returned to Ghaznín. In that year he entered into a contract for the marriage of his sister

In the year 407 H. (1016 A.D.), a band of ruffians murdered Khwárazm Sháh, and Maḥmúd leaving Ghaznín, proceeded first to Balkh and thence to Khwárazm, where a furious battle took place between his forces and those of Khamártásh, the commander-in-chief of Khwárazm. The Sultán's forces gained the day and Maḥmúd appointed Altún Tásh governor of that country, investing him with the title of Khwárazm Sháh, he also took vengeance on the murderers of Khwárazm Sháh, and returned (to Ghaznín) after having arranged those important affairs. 14.

In the year 409 H., he marched with the object of subduing Qanauj,² and having crossed the seven³ dangerous rivers of Hindustán, upon his arrival in the neighbourhood of Qanauj, Kúrah,⁴ the ruler of Qanauj, offered his submission, and sued for quarter, offering presents. fortress of Barnah¹ whose governor Barwat, having entrusted the defence of the fortress to his kinsfolk, retired into seclusion.

The garrison of the fort not being able to withstand Maḥmūd's assault sent a present of a lakh and fifty thousand² rupees, with thirty elephants, and thus obtained quarter. From thence Maḥmūd proceeded to the fortress of Mahāwun³ on the banks of the river Jon,⁴ where the governor of the fort named Kal Chandar⁵ attempted to escape by crossing the river riding on an elephant, but in the meantime the troops of the Sultān arrived, and he destroyed himself by stabbing himself with a dagger—

From thence he went to Mathra⁶ which is a place of worship of the infidels, and the birth place of Kishan, the son of Basudev, whom the Hindus worship as a divinity—where there are idol temples without number, and took it without any contest, and rased it to the ground. Great wealth and booty fell into the hands of the Muslims, among the rest they broke up by the orders of the Sultān, a golden idol, the weight of which was

By chance one night, when they were returning, this elephant broke loose and came into the Sultān's camp without a keeper. The Sultān was greatly pleased with its capture, and gave it the name of Khudādād.³ When the spoil reached Ghaznīn it was found to amount to over twenty million and fifty-three thousand dirams, and three hundred and fifty odd elephants.⁴

In the year 410 H. (1019 A.D.), Maḥmūd⁵ again turned his footsteps towards Hindustān and encountered and fought on the banks of the river Jon with Nandā the Rāja of Kālinjar,⁶ who Both MSS. have بوده but we must read برده as in Firishta, Vol. I p. 51, line 9, et seq. we read thus:—

and when he reached Ghaznīn they counted the spoils of the expedition to Qanauj, twenty thousand dinārs and thousands of thousands of dirams, and fifty thousand slaves and 350 elephants, besides other booty in addition to these. (Firishta, Vol. I. p. 51, l. 9 et seq.)

⁶ Kālinjar in Dangaya, Bundelkhand. A description of this fortress with two plates will be found in Tieffenthaler, Vol. I. p. 244. had with him 36,000 cavalry and 45,000¹ infantry and 640 elephants, and who had put to death the Rájá of Qanauj on the occasion of his submission to the Sultán, and who had also come to the help of Jaipál, who had several times fled from before the Sultán. The servants of the Sultán who had gone forward to the attack, found the city deserted, and sacked it. A terrible dread overwhelmed the heart of Jaipál, so that leaving all his property and material of war just as they stood, he took to flight with some selected companies. Five hundred and eighty elephants during the pursuit, emerging from a forest, fell into the hands of the Sultán's troops. He then returned to Ghaznín.—Many regions passed from the possession of the infidels to the Muslims, moreover the people of that country, either willingly or perforce, made profession of Islám.

In the year 412 H. (1021 A.D.), Máhmud proceeded to Kashmír and laid siege to the fort of Loharkot for a month, but it held out being exceedingly well fortified. Leaving Loharkot he went to Lahore, and in the beginning of spring returned to Ghaznín.

In the year 413 H. (1022 A.D.), he again made an attempt on the country of Nandá, and when he arrived at the fortress of Gwáliár, having reduced it peaceably and accepted presents from its governor, confirmed him in his governorship. As part of that present there were thirty-five elephants. Leaving that place he went to the fort of Kálinjar, the commander of which first made an offering of three hundred elephants and sought his protection.²

He also composed a poem in Hindí in praise of the Sultán, and sent it to him, whereupon the Sultán read the poem in the presence of the eloquent men of Hindustán and the poets of his own country. They were all loud in their praises of the poem, and the Sultán was so proud of it, that he wrote a patent conferring upon him the governorship of fifteen forts as a reward for the poem. Nandá also sent large quantities of property and jewels.

Firishta gives the date of this expedition as 412 A.H. See Elliot, Vol. I. 462, for an account of the various statements.

They held great banquets and gave presents to each other, and 'Alī Tagīn, of whose oppression the people of the regions beyond the river had complained, learning what was happening took to flight. The Sultān pursued him and having captured him sent him a prisoner to one of the fortresses of Hindustān, then he returned and spent the winter in Ghaznīn.

The idol of Somanāth is stated by Alberuni to have been the linga of Mahadeva erected to remove the leprosy of the moon. The word Somanāth means master of the moon. "The image was destroyed by the Prince Maḥmūd, may God be merciful to him!—A. H. 416." Alb. II. 103. Alberuni gives an account here of Somanāth, and states (p. 176) that the day of full moon in the month Śrávana is a fast day holy to Somanāth.

Although certain historians have called this idol Manát, and say that it is the identical idol which the Arab idolators brought to the coasts of Hindustán in the time of the Lord of the Missive (may the blessing and peace of God be upon him), this story has no foundation, because the Brahmans of India firmly believe that this idol has been in that place since the time of Kishan, that is to say four thousand years and a fraction. Its name too, in the Hindí language, is really Sobha Náth, that is to say Lord of Beauty, and not Manát.¹ The reason for this mistake must surely be the resemblance in name, and nothing else. In this expedition, having taken the city of Patan² which is known as Naharwála, a city of Gujerát, and having obtained a great supply of provisions from thence, he arrived at Somnát where the garrison closed the gates of the fort against him, and reaped their reward in rapine and plunder. The fort was taken and Maḥmúd broke the idol in fragments and sent it to Ghaznín, where ² Pattan. Tieffenthaler I. 385, states that Pattan was a very ancient city founded even before Guzerát, 20 miles from Radhanpur, 40 miles north of Guzerát. Its ancient name was Nehroála. It was originally called Anhalpur. See Ain-i-Akbarí (J) II. 262, III. 59, 60. Compare Briggs' Firishta, I., 69., &c, Anhalwára (Elphinstone).

"Canda est une bonne forteresse à 40 milles de Somnath elle est entourée d'eau comme une île : mais on peut y aborder à gué en quelques endroits." This description tallies exactly with Firishta's that there can be little

In that year Al Qádir billáhi² the Khalífah, despatched a flag with a letter appointing the Sultán³ to the Governorship of Khurásán and Hindustán, Nímroz and Khwárazm, and conferred titles of honour upon his brothers and sons, and in the same way assigned the titles of Kahfu-d-Daulat wal Islám to the Sultán, and to his elder son Amír Mas'úd that of Shahábu-d-Daulat wa Jamálu-l-Millat, and to Amír Muḥammad his younger brother that of Jalálu-d-Daulat, and to Amír Yúsuf that of 'Azdu-d-Daulat—and so forth.

In this year by way of punishing the Jats⁴ of the vicinity of Multán, who had committed many acts of disrespect, Maḥmúd brought an army to Multán—and four thousand (some say eight thousand) boats belonging to the Jats laden with their families and property, were sunk in the Multán river on the occasion of a victory obtained by the boats of the Sultán, on which they had arranged some especial contrivance,⁵ and the Jats were drowned and sank in the whirlpool of destruction, and the rest became food for the sword, their families were taken captive, and the Sultán, victorious and triumphant, returned to Ghaznín.—

¹ A district of Persian 'Irâq, situated according to Abul Feda quoting from the Atwâl, in long. 76° 20' and latitude 35° 35'. Its original name was he states, Râzî.

Ibn Hauqal in his article on Dailam, speaks of Rey as a large city at a distance of eight marches from Azarbaijân. It is the ancient Rhages or 'Paydâ of Arrian, the capital of the province of Rhagiana, first known to us in history as the place to which the Jewish exiles were sent. It was the birth place of the famous physician Abu Bakr Muḥammad ibn Zakaríya Ar-Râzî, familiar to the medical world as Rhâzes who lived in the tenth century. His treatise on small-pox and measles (في الجدري والحصبة) was published in a Greek translation περί λοιμικῆς in 1548, and an English translation from the Arabic by Dr. Greenhill. (Sydenham Society, 1847) It was ten days' march from Ecbatana (Hamadân). It was called at different periods Europus and Arsacia. In modern times the ancient name has returned, and its ruins lie now to the south of Teherán and north of Ispahán. The famous jurisconsult Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan, and al-Kisá'yí the reader of the Qurán, are buried there. Persian Irâq comprised the regions of Rey, Qáshán, Ispahán and Hamadán. ² Briggs, Vol. I. p. 83, states that Maḥmúd died of stone, but a reference to Firishta in the original shews that this is not the case. The words are مرض سوء القنية يا سل بهم رصانيد &c.

The disease سوء القنية Sú-ul qinya which literally means an undesirable acquisition, is thus defined by Vüller sub voce قنيت "pravus habitus corporis, gr. καχέξια, while the following translation from the MS. copy of Baḥru-l-Jawáhir in this Library will show how it is there defined:

"The disease is so called because the skin which surrounds a man and changes with his changes (i.e. contracts and expands as necessity arises) is diseased, it is the beginning of dropsy, but inasmuch as the term dropsy is specifically 421 A.H.,¹ and was buried at Ghaznín. His age was sixty years, and he had reigned thirty-one years. They say that when he was restricted to another disease, this term Sú ul qinya is made applicable to this condition."

In the Istilahátu-l-Funún we find the disease described as "the commencement of dropsy due to weakness of liver and derangement of that organ." The quotation however is an erroneous transcription from Al Mújaz of Sadídí, a translation from which follows,—he writes "the commencement of dropsy due to weakness and derangement of the liver, with resulting pallor and whiteness owing to defect in the formation of good blood from disorder and weakness of the liver, it also arises from disorder of the stomach and weakness of that organ.

The face and extremities, that is the hands and feet, and especially the eyelids, become swollen owing to the weakness of digestion and the rising of moist vapours, and their effect upon the eyelids and extremities, and at times it extends to the entire body, so that the body becomes like dough. One of its symptoms is flatulence and borborygmus, with irregularity of the bowels. All of these are due to indigestion. The gums also are affected with pustules from the evil vapours which arise.

Its cure is a gentle course of treatment for the dropsy. Means must be taken at first to secure a minimum of excrementitious products, and drinking much water must be forbidden, and the patient directed to bathe in borax and alum water, or in sea water, as bathing in fresh water is harmful. Drinking wormwood and dinárí and wardí is beneficial. The food must be appetising and strengthening to the liver, as for instance partridges; Cantharides flavoured with cloves and cinnamon and mastic and saffron are beneficial. The vomiting must be treated with aperients, when it will cease, but if more energetic treatment be required we may add agaricum and rhubarb which do no harm in this disease." (Al Muḡhní fí Sharḥi Mújaz by Sadídí).

It is evident from the above description that the disease from which Mahmúd died was not either hectic fever (Badáuní) or phthisis سل (Firishta), but an anæmia, very probably "idiopathic anæmia" or "progressive pernicious anæmia." The condition of the gums points to a possibly scorbutic taint, though it was probably ulcerous stomatitis so common at the close of wasting disease. Malaria may have shared in the causation of the illness. There is just a possibility that the disease may have been myxœdema, the increase in bulk of the body with the alteration and sweating of the skin, the turgescence of the mucous membrane of the mouth—all point in this direction. Against this supposition however, is the sex and the age, both of which are in favour of pernicious anæmia. His age was 61.

The question of stone nowhere appears in the original authorities, and it is difficult to see why Briggs should put forward such a statement. See also Elliott, IV. 188, note 1.

¹ This date is the same as that given by Firishta:

Raverty in the Tabaqát-i-Nasrí, p. 87, note 9, gives Thursday, the 14th of

The glory of Maḥmúd passed away, nothing remained in the

Save only this saying "He recognized not the worth of Firdausi.

Rabí'u-s-sani, 421 H. (A.D. 1030) quoting the Maqámát of Amíd Abú Naṣr by Al-Baihaqí as his authority.

The Tabaqát-i-Naṣiri gives his age at the time of his death as 61, and states that he had reigned 33 years.

¹ Abul Qásim Firdausi the celebrated poet, author of the Sháh Námah, was a native of Tús in Khorásán where he was born about 339 A.H. (950 A.D.) He died in 411 A.H. (1020 A.D.) or 416 A.H. (Guzída). He was appointed by Maḥmúd to complete the Sháh Námah. As a reward for this labour he was promised a thousand misqáls of gold for every thousand distichs. However by the machinations of Aiyáz one of Maḥmúd's favourites who bore Firdausi a grudge for a fancied slight, the poet was represented to Maḥmúd as being a schismatic and heretic, and eventually was put off with 60,000 silver dirhams instead of the promised 60,000 misqáls. This so enraged him that he divided the 60,000 dirhams among the attendants of the bath where he was at the time of receipt. Finally he wrote a brilliant satire on the Sultán in the very copy of the Sháhnámah which he had presented to him on its completion, and fled from Maḥmúd's court to Mázinderán and thence to Baghdád. Maḥmúd at last relented, and sent Firdausi the 60,000 dínárs with a robe of state and apologies for his former harsh treatment, but when the presents arrived the body of Firdausi was being carried out for burial. See Atashkada 'Azur p. 92 et seqq, also Atkinson's Sháhnámah, Preface: also Elliott, IV. 191. See also Hunter's Indian Empire, p. 219. and Beale's Dict. of Oriental Biography.

² Mulla Núrud-Dín Abdur Rahmán (Jámí) author of "Yúsuf and Zulaikha" Beháristán, &c., was born at Jám in 817 H. (?) He died in 898 H. See Atashkada-i-'Azur p. 78.

He was called عارف the holy from his position as one of the greatest divines of his day. He was the spiritual guide of the Vazír Amír Alf Sher. He performed the Hajj in 877 A.H., and died at Herát twenty years later.

And in the Tazkira of Muḥammad Ufí,¹ the following Qita'ā has been attributed to the Sultān Maḥmūd.

From the dread of the world-winning sword and the fear of the fort-crushing sceptre,

The world became subject to me as I am subjected to reason,
At one time there would I sit serene in my splendour and riches

At another time following Avarice roamed I from country 20.
to country ;

Oft would I boastfully say Lo ! I am a man of importance,
But now I clearly perceive that the King and the beggar are equals.

I, with one wave of my hand, have conquered a myriad of castles

With one firm plant of my foot I have broken lines without number

When Death made the final assault, naught then did my splendour avail me

Nothing continues but God, God's kingdom alone is a kingdom.

He was a native of Merv which under the Saljūq princes was the capital of Persia. He was also known as Nūruddīn Muḥammad Ufí. (Beale, O. B. D.). See also J. R. A. S., Vol. IX. 113.

Amír Aiyáz joined Amír Mas'úd at Nishapúr,³ and four months later Amír Muḥammad moved his camp in the direction of Bust,⁴ and came out in full force from Ghaznín with the intention of fighting with his brother, and when he reached Takínábád⁵ all his Amírs having revolted against him, put out his eyes and threw him into the fort of Bajj⁶ in Majbaristán⁷ and having gone over to Amír Mas'úd with the whole army and treasures, went to Herát and met him there. The blinded Amír Muḥammad reigned five months, but according to Qázi Baizáwí⁸ it was fourteen years, and the period of his imprisonment was nine years. God knows the truth. The author of the⁹ Lubbu-t-Tawárikh writes that Muhammad ibn Mahmúd wielded sovereignty in Ghazna for four years in the first instance, during the reign of his father, afterwards he was imprisoned for nine years by the command of his brother Mas'úd, and after the murder of Mas'úd he reigned for another year and then died.

SHAHÁBU-D-DAULAT SULTÁN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

By the consent of the Amírs and Vazírs of Maḥmúd he ascended the imperial throne, and having come from Harí² to Balkh, spent the winter there, and summoning Aḥmad ibn Ḥasan Maimandí whom Sultán Maḥmúd kept a prisoner in the fort of Kálinjar, made him a Vazír. Then leaving Balkh he came to Ghaznín and thence started for Sipáhán and Rái, and arriving at Herát engaged in war with the Turkománs, and not overcoming them, but on the contrary suffering defeat at their hands, turned back. The Turkománs increased in power day by day owing to his weakness, till affairs assumed the aspect which they eventually did.³

They reduced the fort and captured immense booty putting to the sword the greater part of Deipál's army, but he himself escaped alone. crossing the Jihún occupied the whole of Transoxiána. Dáúd the Turkomán, who had previously defeated Tughdí Beg and Amír Husain, marched with a large force towards Balkh. Amír Mas'úd thereupon returned from Transoxiána to Balkh and Dáúd the Turkomán¹ leaving Balkh, went to Merv. In the meantime Tughdí Beg² had been acting oppressively in the neighbourhood of Gurgán. When the Amír Mas'úd perceived the symptoms of his rebellion he ordered him to be impaled. The Amír Mas'úd then exacted a stipulation and promise from Béghú³ the Turkomán who was the chief of that tribe, that henceforward they would never attempt any lawlessness, and having delimited their boundaries in a suitable way left for Herát. While on his way thither a body of the Turkománs fell upon the army of Mas'úd, killing some and plundering the baggage. The soldiers of the Sultán who were told off to attack them made the whole of that party food for the sword, and brought their wives and families together with the heads of the slain into the presence of Amír Mas'úd who sent asses laden with the heads to Béghú. Béghú apologized, and it so happens that this is the very same Béghú in praise of whom the poet Ziaí⁴ of Persia has composed several odes from which the following verses are selected—

24. It is wrong for me to bewail the misfortunes of others than thee,
It is wrong not to weep with thy sorrow.
My occupation day and night is to lament and bewail thy sorrow.

⁴ Zíáu-d-Dín Khajandí Al Fársí, a native of Shíráz who left Shíráz in his youth and took up his abode at Khajand. He was a contemporary and panegyrist of Sultán Malik Sháh Saljúqí, and died at Herát in the year 522 H. (In the Majma'-ul Fusahá from which these particulars are taken, the date of his death is 622 H., but this is an error as Malik Sháh died in 491 H.)

Beale (Oriental Biographical Dictionary) gives the date as 622 H., but this is in all probability copied from the above authority.

Thou did'st say, "Thou did'st weep for love of me," but verily there is a difference in shedding blood and shedding tears

At all hours I suffer a thousand pangs for the grief of the love of thee, nor do I weep alone.

I cannot but melt with love of thee, nor is there any remedy for the pain I suffer for thee, save weeping.

Apart from thee Fate has nothing in store for me

Save vexation, one day, and weeping the next.

over thy enemies in the field of battle,

What is prepared for thine adversary in either world?

There is the torture of hell, here he must weep.

Lo! one who in the madness of his fear at thy displeasure

Seeks to hide himself in a corner and prepares to weep.

Thy enemies have many manifest and hidden projects

But the wound is hidden, the weeping is manifest.

I believe that this must have come into your exalted mind,

In every smile thy ruby lip scatters the life blood.

The trade of thy hyacinthine ringlets is to scatter perfume,

The habit of thy delicate lips is to smile sweetly.

Till thou seest not the cheek of gold thou smilest not,

Every flower smiles from the enjoyment of the gold.

When thou smilest a whole world smiles looking towards thee

For no one before this has seen the sun and moon to smile (at mourning

The wise and excellent do not approve of smiling.

All my disorder is due to grief on thy account,

Why then do you smile at me disordered as I am?

It may be that from the crown and canopy of kings thy locks and cheek have learned to smile both morning and evening.

Conqueror of infidelity, Nizámu-ud-Dín, whose friends are always engaged in enjoyment, and only vary it by smiling. If the seed could receive the good tidings of his approbation, even from the loins of his father would one begin to smile. Then he put to death some of the inhabitants of Mahnah, and cut off the hands and feet of many more and thence went in the direction of Zírqán³ in which place the Turkománs brought together a large army and fought a severe battle with the Sultán. In this battle the majority of the generals of the army of Ghaznín mutinied and went over to the enemy. The Sultán remaining all alone on the field, felled several of the Turkomán leaders with sword, spear and mace, and eventually came out of that engagement safely. This event took place on the 8th of Ramazán, 431 H. (1039 A. D.). From thence Amír Mas'úd came to Merv, and several of the soldiery from the neighbouring country having come in at last sided with him. He went to Ghaznín by way of Ghaur,⁴ and having fined these chiefs who had not fought and had fled, sent some of them, as for instance 'Alí Dáya and Hájibi-Buzurg,⁵ and Beg Tughdí to Hindustán and imprisoned⁶ them in fortresses. ³ Zírqán is not mentioned by other authors I have consulted and may be a clerical error. The name of the place where this battle was fought was Dandángán a town in the vicinity of Merv, cf. Raverty, p. 94, note 3. Also Abul Feda II. ii. 197. Meynard, p. 239. It seems to me most probable that we should read زند خان though all MSS. give زیر خان. Zandkhán, زند خان is a fortified town situated at the distance of one farsakh from Sarakhs (Meynard, 288).

He then appointed the Amír Muḥammad¹ with two thousand soldiers to proceed to Multán, and sent the Amír of that district² to the foot of the hills of Ghaznín to restrain the Afgháns of that district who had broken out into rebellion; and having laden camels with the whole of Maḥmúd's treasures which were stored in Ghaznín and the neighbouring fortresses started for Hindustán and despatched mesengers en route to bring his brother Amír Muḥammad who had been blinded³ and was then confined in the fortress of Bazghand.⁴ When Sultán Mas'úd arrived at the frontier fort⁵ of Máríkala,⁶ his slaves plundered all the treasure-camels. In the meantime the Amír Muḥammad arrived there, and the slaves who recognised that this violence would have no successful issue unless another governor were appointed⁷ perforce, approached the Amír Muḥammad, raised him to the Sovereignty and breaking into open riot assaulted Sultán Mas'úd who had taken refuge in that fort. The next day the whole army becoming violent brought Amír Mas'úd from within the fort of Máríkala and made him prisoner confining him within the fortress of Kírí,⁸ till at last in Jamádín-l-Awwal 432 H. they sent a false

This story is according to the relation of Nizámi,¹ but the Qází Baizáwí relates that in the year 432 Mas'úd fled defeated from before the Seljúqs to Ghaznín, and Amír Muḥammad who had consolidated his power during Mas'úd's absence sent him to a fortress whither his son Aḥmád ibn Muḥammad followed him and murdered him.² The Government of Sultán Mas'úd ibn Maḥmúd lasted eleven years, but we ought to note that the Qází Baizáwí (may God's mercy be upon him) assigns the year 433 H. as the date of the death of Mas'úd, and writes that Muḥammad ibn Maḥmúd reigned in Ghaznín for fourteen years after his father,³ one year after his father's death, nine years in the lifetime of his brother, and four years after his brother's death, as has already been stated. God alone knows the truth. Apparently this is due to the mistake of a copyist. Among the poets who flourished in

² Baizáwí's account is as follows:—

Mas'úd after his arrival at Ghaznín sent Yúsuf to prison and became master of all the dominions of his father. In his time the Seljúqs crossed the Jihún and invaded Khurásán. He fought with them and made peace with them several times but being defeated in A. H. 432, he returned to Ghaznín where his brother Muḥammad had regained power in his absence. On his arrival he was consigned to a fort, and Aḥmád, the son of Muḥammad, went direct from his father to the fort, and there slew him, A. H. 433; Elliott II. 256.

³ That is from 421 A. H. to 434 A. H. with interruptions during the supremacy of Mas'úd. Maḥmúd died in 421 A. H. Mas'úd was murdered on the 11th of Jamadí-ul-Awwal, 433 H. (Raverty, pp. 95-6.)

Muḥammad was put to death by Maḥmúd in revenge for his father's murder in the year 434 H. Maḥmúd reigned seven years and died in 441 H. (1049 A.D.)

the time of Sultán Mas'úd is Manúchihrí⁴ who speaks as follows in a qaṣīdah concerning his Wazír.

Ascended the throne of Empire (after the murder of his father in Bámián¹) with the consent of the Wazírs and Amírs, and with the object of avenging his father purposed to march towards Mári galah, but Abu Naṣr Aḥmád ibn Muḥammad ibn Abduṣ Ṣamad opposed his projected expedition and brought him to Ghaznín, whence he proceeded with a large army to attack his uncle the blind Amír Muḥammad. On arriving at Dípúr² he engaged in a severe battle with the Amír Muḥammad and thus passed the whole day till nightfall when both fell back upon their positions. The next day Sultán Maudúd induced the Amír Saiyyid Maṣṣúr who was one of the trusted (generals) of the Amír Muḥammad to side with him, and engaging in battle took prisoners the Amír Muḥammad and his son Aḥmád and put them all to death. The Amír Maudúd founded there a city which he

And in the year 434 H. Artagín at the order of the Sultán proceeded with an army to Tabaristán against Dá'úd⁴ the Turko-mán, and having lost in battle a large number of his men came to Balkh and established the coinage and proclamation of sovereignty in the name of the Amír Maudúd. Afterwards when the Turko-máns attacked him several times in force not being able to contend with them, he quitted Balkh and came to Ghaznín. Then in the year 435 H. Amír Maudúd imprisoned Abú 'Alí the Kotwál of Ghaznín for a time, but eventually appointed him as the Diwán of the kingdom and Kotwál of Ghaznín, and imprisoned Yasúrí ibn Iyamghúr the Diwán, till at length he died in confinement; he also punished Altigín⁵ and in the year 436 H. Khwāja Táhir who had succeeded Khwāja Aḥmad as Wazir, died, and was succeeded by Khwāja Imám Abul Fath 'Abdur Razzáq.⁶ In this same year he sent Tughrál Hájib in the direction of Bust, who took prisoner Abú Mansúr Zangí,⁷ the brother of Abul Fazl and brought him to Ghaznín, he then departed for Seistán and having

In the year 438 H., he sent Tughral to Takínábád who on arrival there revolted. Accordingly Alí bin Rabí' was nominated to proceed thither and Tughral fled with a few followers. Alí plundered his army, and having captured some of them brought them to Ghaznín. In the year 439 H. the Amír Qazdár raised a rebellion³ and suffered defeat at the hands of Hájb Buzurg Bártagín⁴ and after a time tendered his submission.

And in the year 440 H. having conferred upon his two sons Abul Qásim Maḥmúd and Maṣṣúr on the same day robes of honour and the drum and ensigns of commission sent one of them towards Lahore and the other towards Parshúr⁵ and he sent Abú Alí Hasan Kotwál of Ghaznín to Hindustán to punish the rebels there, and when Hasan returned to Ghaznín after having done good service Maudúd made him over to Mírak ibn Hasan with orders to imprison him. He died in prison. As a sequel to this, Mírak ibn Hasan the Vakíl who had murdered Abú 'Alí Hasan without the orders of Amír Maudúd and had kept it secret, incited the King to proceed to Kábul so that that misdeed of his might remain concealed. When the Amír Maudúd reached the fortress of Siálkot¹ he was attacked with colic² and was forced to return to Ghaznín, and ordered Mírak to release Abú Ali Kotwál. He accordingly prayed for a week's respite, and in the interim Amír Maudúd departed this life on the 24th of Rajab A. H. 441, having reigned nearly nine years. The *Lubbu-t-Tawárikh*³ states that Sultán Maudúd asked in marriage the daughter of Chughz⁴ Beg Saljúqí, by whom he had a son whom he named Mas'úd, that he reigned seven years, and that in the month of Rajab 441 he attempted to go to Khorásán to visit Chughz Beg, but died on the journey of colic. 33.

² قولنج. Probably intestinal obstruction which is included under the term قولنج Qúlinj of which there are stated by Sadídí to be five varieties. Cf. Sadídí Art. قولنج.

- i القولنج الحقيقي True or spasmodic colic.
- ii القولنج السدي Obstructive colic—due as he says to an accumulation of بلغم or mucus in the cæcum or colon.
- iii القولنج الريحي Flatulent colic.
- iv ررم حار او بارد اعزاء وما يجاورها مثل الكبد والكلية An acute or chronic swelling of the bowels and neighbouring parts such as the liver and kidneys.
- v القولنج الالتوائي Twisted colic which he defines as a twist of the distal end of the small intestine. Volvulus.

In the بحر الجواهر we find the following definition of the disease: "A disease in which the bowels become disarranged on account of some unnatural obstruction (لاحتباس غير طبيعي) It is very painful and increases in violence and is fatal."

Defining the Colon the author says: اكثر تولد القولنج فيها واقولنج يشنق منها Colic principally arises in this bowel and is a strangulation of part of it.

SULTĀN MAS'ÚD IBN MAUDÚD IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAḤMÚD.

Ascended the throne in the third year of his age by the machinations of 'Alí ibn Rabí', however his affairs did not prosper and they raised his uncle to the throne after he had reigned only five months.¹

SULTĀN 'ALÍ IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAḤMÚD.

Ascended the throne by the consent of the nobles, and when 'Abdu-r-Razzáq ibn Aḥmad Maimandí who had been sent by the Amír Maudúd towards Seistán arrived at a fort between Bust and Isfirár,² and learned that Abdu-r-Rashíd ibn MaḤmúd was confined in that fort by the orders of the Amír Maudúd, he brought him back and placed him upon the throne, 'Alí having reigned for a period of about three months. This event took place in the year 443 H. (1051 A. D.)

SULTĀN 'ABDU-R-RASHÍD IBN MAḤMÚD.

34. Came to the throne, and with the consent of 'Abdu-r-Razzáq proceeded to Ghaznín. 'Alí ibn Mas'úd fled without engaging in battle, and Tughral Ḥájib who was one of the household slaves of Sultán MaḤmúd having conquered Seistán turned his steps towards Ghaznín. Amír 'Abdu-r-Rashíd fortified himself there till Tughral obtaining an opportunity in the year 445 H. (1053 A. D.) put the Amír Abdur Rashíd with all the descendants of Sultán MaḤmúd³ to death and married the daughter of Mas'úd against her will. One day when he was on the throne a body of determined wrestlers inspired with hatred against him tore him to pieces. 'Abdu-r-Rashíd's reign lasted for four years, but in the Nizamu-t-Tawárikh his reign is said to have lasted for seven years,¹ and in the Lubbu-t-Tawárikh his death is said to have occurred in the year 445 H. God knows the truth.

SULTÁN FARRUKH ZÁD IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

Being released from confinement succeeded to the kingdom by consent of the nobles. A body of Saljúqs came up against Ghaznín, and Farrukhzád put most of them to death and overcame them, and made many of them prisoners and sent them to Ghaznín. Alp Arsalán² the Saljúq king brought an army against Ghaznín from 'Irâq and Khorásán, and being victorious in fight conveyed a large number of the notables of Ghaznín to Khorásán. Eventually upon the arrangement of terms of peace the prisoners of both sides obtained their release, and since Zábulistán had been laid waste the Sultán remitted the usual tribute, and treated the inhabitants with kindness. He used to fast three months, and used to spend the greater part of the night in prayer. He died of colic in the year 450 H.³ The period of his reign was six years.

SAIYYIDU-S-SALÁṬÍN IBRAHÍM IBN MAS'ÚD IBN MAHMÚD.

Ascended the throne. He was a just and devout king, and used to write each year a Qurán with his own hand and despatch it to the holy city of Mekka. He built no house for himself with the exception of a temple and a school to the honour and glory of God. When the affairs of state devolved upon him, he made peace with the Saljúqs and being free from apprehension, went to Hindustán and conquered many fortresses and districts.

¹ Firishṭa says "less than one year." Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣiri says two and a half years.

² Alp Arsalán son of Dáúd, son of Mikáil son of Saljúq was the second Sultán of the family and dynasty of the Saljúqs. He succeeded his uncle Tughral Beg in 455 A.H. (1063 A.D.) He was born in 421 A.H. and was murdered 466 A.H. and was buried at Merv.

For a full account of this prince see D'Herbelot, pp. 198-203.

See also Ibn Khalliqán (Slane) iii. 230 and seqq; where it is stated that Alp Arsalán was born in the year 424 (A.D. 1032-3) and died on the 10th of Rabí'u-l Awwal 465 A. H. (1072 A.D.)

³ Firishṭa mentions that a year previous to his death an attempt was made upon his life while he was in the hammám.

From one city¹ the inhabitants of which were of Khurásánian descent, whom (Afrásiáb) had expelled, and who had become a populous community in Hindustán, he took prisoners a hundred thousand persons,² and sent them to Ghaznín, with other spoils on the same scale. He built a number of towns, among them Khairábád, and Imánábád and others. He has been described by the title of Saiyyidu-s-Salátín, and enjoyed the reputation of being a Wálí.³ In his reign in Ghaznín, the Dárú-i-Chashm (eye medicine) and other mixtures and medicaments and dietaries for all diseased folk used to be obtainable from his store-house. His death took place in the year 472 H.,⁴ after a reign of thirty years. Qází Baizáwí says that his reign extended from the year 450 H. to the year 492 H. Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán⁵ flourished in his time and the following verses are taken from an ode which was written in his honour.

¹ Named "Darra." (Firishta) where we read که افراسیاب از سرکشی ایشان بشک آمده بازن و فرزند از ولایت خراسان اخراج کرده بود و بهندوستان فرستاده

In our author's text we read — و آخر ایشان را اخراج کرده — which is evidently corrupt. The words in the Ṭabaqát Akbar Sháhí are almost identical with those quoted from Firishta and some such change as the substitution of the word افراسیاب for the words اخرا ایشان which may easily have arisen from a copyist's mistake, seems to have occurred in our text. (MSS. (A) and (B) are like the text).

² Because they were idolaters and refused to embrace Islám, according to Firishta.

⁴ Firishta says 482 H. or 492 H. Ṭabaqát-i-Násirí 492 H. with a reign of forty-two years.

⁵ Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán Jurjání. Known sometimes as Hamadání. The son of Khája Sa'd ibn Salmán. A famous poet native of Jurján who attained

Abúl Qásim Malik Maḥmúd Ibrahím ibn Mas'úd

In whom four things exult, each of them glories in him

Firstly, his expanded canopy, secondly, his flaunting banner,

Thirdly his golden pen, fourthly his brilliant dagger.

This ode he finished completely in the same style, and in another place he says :—

Emperor of the higher world, from the blessings of whose reign

The sword's lofty occupation is the control of things temporal and spiritual.

Mas'úd (Fortunatus) because from the fortune of the expanse of kingdom's conquest

He has gone beyond that which comes within the scope of the sword.

Ode.

Oh thou that hast formed the design of travel and girded
the loins of conquest,

Right and left of thee the heavens have opened for thee the doors of conquest,

Mas'úd, the world-conquering, for whom the age of fortune
Has sent forth every moment the heralds of conquest,
Like a lance point thou hast placed thy head in the direction of battle,

Like an arrow thy waist girds up the loins of conquest,
In sooth, a hundred victories thou winnest, and a hundred years hence

In Hindustán in all directions will be seen the traces of thy conquest. 37.

So many are thy conquests, that in the expanse of the world
Every day in every place they tell the tale of thy conquests.

high distinction in the service of Mas'úd bin Maḥmúd and Sultán Ibrahím of Ghaznín but was imprisoned for a time in the fortress of Nái owing to the spiteful rancour of Abul Faraj Rúní. He obtained his release upon the death of Mas'úd ibn Maḥmúd. He was however again made prisoner for some years and upon being released left the court and went into retirement in Ghaznín where he died. There is a very long account of him with copious extracts from his various poems in the Majma'ul Fuṣahá, Vol. I. pp. 514 and seqq. See also Beale (O.B.D. p. 173.) and Atashkada-i-Ázur, p. 162.

Thy spear and thy arrow and thy sword will be
 If my fancy limns a line, the painter of the forms of conquest
 When thy sword said I will deal a light blow
 Its oath lay not heavy save on the head of conquest.

The Ustád Abul Faraj Rúní¹ too was eulogist of Sultán Ibrahím, and also the panegyrist of Sultán Mas'úd, and many odes in their honour are to be found in his Díwán, and Rúín² is the name of a village of the dependencies of Lahore, and in these days it is as one may say in ruins, because not a trace of it remains, and the following qita'h in praise of Sultán Ibrahím is by the Ustád Abul Faraj.

Hail to the might of thy powerful sword
 Precious as the breath of life, and rare as wisdom itself.
 Thou hast imprisoned that lifeless one, as one seizes the throat,
 Thou hast made orphan this which has no issue like a peerless pearl.

38. And Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán with that envious nature which is peculiar to poets, bore a grudge against Ustád, who became the cause of Mas'úd's imprisonment for ten years, he wrote this rubá'í (quatrain) in prison.³

¹ Abul Faraj Rúní, a celebrated poet. The name Rúní is from the village of Rúna (رونا) in Nísápur. He was a great favourite and companion of Sultán Ibrahím, and we learn from Mas'úd Sa'd Salmán Jurjání that he fell under the displeasure of that king and was imprisoned in the fortress of Náí by the calumny of Abul Faraj, as is stated in the text a few lines further on. Abul Faraj lived for some time at Láhore, so that he is known to a few as "Láhorí." His writings were very elegant and served as a model for the poet Anwari. A Díwán of his containing about 2,000 verses is extant. (Majma'ul Fuṣahá I. 70). See also Atashkada-i-Ázur, pp. 137, 138.

² Beale (O.B.D., p. 15) says that he came from "Rún a place near Lahore." It would appear from the text above that Badáoni attributed his name of Rúní to his connection with the village of Rúín. The author of the Majma'ul Fuṣahá gives no authority for the statement above quoted so that it is difficult to decide which of the places is to be given the honour.

³ He was imprisoned in the year 572 H. by Maḥmúd ibn Ibrahím in the fortress of Náí. (Majma'ul Fuṣahá loc. cit.). See note 5, page 52.

For thy prison such a prisoner as Malik Sháh is necessary
 So that thy fetter may chafe the foot of monarchs.¹
 That one who springs from the loins of Sa'd Salmán
 Even were he a serpent would not sting thy realm.

The following verses are also by him :

My heart has become rent in all directions like a comb from regrets
 Because I saw a white hair in the tooth of the comb.

There are extant also Díwáns by him in Arabic, Persian and Hindí.

'ALÁU-D-DÍN MAS'ÚD IBN IBRAHÍM IBN SULTÁN MAS'ÚD,

He gave battle with thirty thousand cavalry and being defeated went to Hindustán. Sultán Sinjar remained forty days in Ghaznín and after presenting that country to Bahrám Sháh retraced his steps. Arsalán Sháh having collected a large army in Hindustán proceeded thence to attack Ghaznín, and Bahrám Sháh not being able to withstand him sought refuge in the fortress of Bámián and with the assistance of Sultán Sinjar having again seized Ghaznín and taken Arsalán Sháh captive put him to death in the year 510 H. And the *Hadiqatu-l-Haqiqat*¹ of Shaikh Sanái is written in honour of Bahrám Sháh, it was written during his imprisonment, the reason of which imprisonment was Ghaznévide fanaticism with regard to Sunni doctrine, when this book having reached the capital of Baghdád received the imprimatur of the chief men and nobles, it attested the reality of his faith, and they wrote a memorandum which led to his being released. A short time subsequently he departed this life. It is said that when they accused the worthy Shaikh Sanái of heresy after he composed the Hadiqat, he wrote the following letter to the Sultán Bahrám Sháh.

In the name of God the merciful, the compassionate:

Praise be to God the Lord of the worlds, and blessings upon the best of His created beings, Muḥammad, his family and companions all of them. To proceed, it is said in certain traditionary sayings, that two things tend to prolong life, and to cause rain to fall and trees to grow, one of these is to assist the oppressed—the other to repress the tyrannical. An argument which they have advanced in support of this is that the prophet, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him, declared that the heavens are established by righteousness (equity). Equity is like the bird² which, wherever it casts its shadow, secures an amplitude of

Hence it is that our prophet, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him, said, Pity three people, a rich man who has become poor, the great man of a tribe who is disgraced, and a wise man among fools.⁴ A book which is written in the language of the learned in the knowledge of God, demands an acute and discriminating mind such as that of Báyzíd ⁵ and

43. Then Sultán Bahrám Sháh brought up several armies against Hindustán and conquered the cities which his forefathers had not taken, and leaving one of his Amírs of high rank in Hindustán returned to Ghaznín. That Amír revolted, and fought a severe battle with the Sultán in the vicinity of Multán, and a bitter conflict ensued; in the end the Sultán's enemy fell a prisoner into his hands and was put to death, and a second time the country of Hindustán came into his possession, and 'Aláu-d-Dín Hasan ibn Husain Súrí who is one of the kings of Ghor revolted against him and proceeded to Ghaznín. Bahrám Sháh fled and 'Aláu-d-Dín left his brother Saifu-d-Dín Súrí in Ghaznín. Bahrám Sháh returned and retook Ghaznín, and having seated Saifu-d-Dín upon a cow, and having exposed him to public ridicule, killed him in the worst possible way. 'Aláu-d-Dín upon hearing this news was most distressed and made for Ghaznín with a huge army—before his arrival however Bahrám Sháh had reached the other world and his son was on the throne in his stead. 'Aláu-d-Dín by way of avenging his brother carried several loads of the earth of Ghaznín to Ghor² and set rivers of blood flowing, he is accordingly famous in his own country. Bahrám Sháh left this world in the year 547 H. (1152 A.D.) the period of his reign was thirty two years.

and for the second time returned to Lahore, where he died in the year 555 H., after a reign of eight years. In his time many great poets flourished and wrote odes in praise of him. The following poem is of the kind called *Tarjī-band*¹ and was written by one of them in his honour.

The revered Emperor Khusrau Sháh who with ease
Conquers with sword and mace from Hindústán to Khorásán.

It must be stated, that in the historical works by Qází Baizáwí and others² it has been written that when 'Aláu-d-Dín plundered Ghaznah and put many of the inhabitants to death, he left there Ghiyásu-d-Dín Abul-fatḥ Muḥammad and Shihábu-d-Dín Abul Muzaffar who were his nephews. They then with great craft put Khusrau Sháh at his ease with regard to themselves and took up their abode in his city. Khusrau Sháh³ was imprisoned in the year 555 H., and died in the same year, and the days of the Ghaznévide family came to an end. After a time Ghiyásu-d-Dín died, and the whole kingdom remained in the possession of Shihábu-d-Din, but since Khwája Nizámu-d-Dín Aḥmad deceased, has written in the Tárikh-i-Nizámí copying from the Rauzatu-s-Safá that Khusrau Malik ibn Khusrau Sháh was the last of the kings of the Ghaznévide dynasty, I have followed him—God knows the truth.⁴

² See Ain-i-Akbarí (Jarrett) iii. 341. See also Elliott II. 258.

³ The Rauzatu-s-Safá however states that Khusrau Sháh reigned at Lahore two years after he fled from Ghaznín, and on his death was succeeded by his son Khusrau Malik.

The account in the text is that given by Baizáwí and other reliable authorities.

Baizáwí states that the Ghaznévide dynasty ended with Khusrú Sháh. The work here quoted is best known as the Tabaqát-i-Akbarí, but its author called it Tabaqát-i-Akbar-Sháhí, and Badáoni calls it also by that name as well as by the name Tárikh-i-Nizámí. As has been seen the present work is admitted by the author to be merely an abridgment of the kingdom, and the dynasty of the Ghaznévíyah was growing old while that of Ghor was in full vigour, accordingly Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám, who is well-known under the title of Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín Ghori, having gained the upper hand and making Ghaznín his capital, brought an army against Hindústán and came with overwhelming force near to Lahore. Khusrau Malik fortified himself there and was compelled to ask for quarter in a personal interview. Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám took him to Ghaznín, from thence sending him to Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Din, who imprisoned him in Fíroz Koh¹ and sent an order, and after ten years' confinement made him taste the cup of destruction.

Set not your heart on this world, for it is without foundation

The real facts are that the son Khusrau Malik succeeded his father and reigned till 583 (H.) (1187 A. D.), as is stated by our author.

¹ The Tabaqát-i-Násirí states that Khusrau Malik was imprisoned in the fortress of Balarwán in Gharjistán. Firúz Koh was the capital. The story of the treachery by which Shihábu-d-Dín Ghori took Khusrau Malik prisoner is told by Firishta.

II. THE GHORÍ DYNASTY.

Who reigned in Dehli. This dynasty commences with Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín Ghorí² who is known as Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad ibn Sám.

SULTÁN MUIZZU-D-DÍN MUḤAMMAD IBN SÁM GHORÍ.

Ascending the throne as regent in place of his elder brother Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín, king of Ghor and 'Iráq and Khorásán, in the year 569 H., in Ghaznín, had the khutba read and the currency struck in his own name,³ and in obedience to the command of his brother brought several armies against Hindustán and raised aloft the standard of holy war. Dehli was reduced in his time.

¹ None of these estimates are exactly accurate, that of the Tarikh-i-Nizámí is the nearest. The actual duration of the Ghaznévide dynasty taking Khusrau Malik as the last representative was from 366 A. H. (976 A. D.) to 583 A. H. (1187 A. D.) a period of 217 years during which time there were fifteen sovereigns.

It is difficult to see how Baizáwí arrives at his statement above quoted as from the accession of Maḥmúd in 387 A. H., to that of Khusrau Sháh in 552 A. H. is 165 years during which twelve kings reigned.

The statement of Qází Yahya Qazwíní is so far from the truth as to be impossible.

If we take Khusrau Sháh as the last Ghaznévide king the dynasty lasted from 366 A. H. to 555 A. H., a period of 189 years.

² Who was nominated with his elder brother Ghiyásu-d-Dín to the charge of a province of Ghor by his uncle Aláu-d-Dín Husain Jahánsoz.

³ As a matter of fact the coins were struck in the joint names of Ghiyásu-d-Dín and Muizzu-d-Dín, and as Thomas remarks the superlative الاعظم "The greatest" is applied to Ghiyásu-d-Dín while Muizzu-d-Dín is only styled كبير "Great" (Thomas, Pathán kings of Dehli, p. 13).

In brief, Sultán Ghiyásu-d Dín when he had seized Tagínábád¹ which was one of the dependencies of Garmsir and had made over the governorship of that place to Sultán Shahábu-d-Dín, used continually to bring up armies against Ghazuín, till at last in the abovementioned year Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín brought that country within the circle of his conquests, and drove out of Ghaznín the tribe of Ghuzz, who after the captivity of Sultán Sinjar had been in possession of it, and bestowed upon Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad, the title of Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín.² Sultán Shihábu-d-Dín after one year of sovereignty as vicegerent

² The statement in the text forms the subject of considerable controversy as there are found those who assert that the title Shihábu-d-Dín is an impossible one as applied to Muizzu-d-Dín popularly known as Muḥammad Ghorí. (see Raverty's Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí p. 446 note 5). It is true that the author of the Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí states that Muizzu-d-Dín was originally called Zangí while Ghiyásu-d-Dín was called Ḥabshi—both of them being called Muḥammad. He goes on to say that prior to Ghiyásu-d-Dín's accession to the throne Ghor he was called Shamsu-d-Dín and that Muizzu-d-Dín was called Shihábu-d-Dín. The actual statement is

و پیش ازین لقب او ملک شمس الدین بود و لقب برادرش شهاب الدین
بعد از مدتی که بر تخت بود لقب او سلطان غیاث الدین شد و برادرش ملک
شهاب الدین بعد از فتوح خراسان سلطان معز الدین شد -

"Before this his title had been Malik Shamsu-d-Dín and the title of his brother had been Shihábu-d-Dín. Some time after his accession his title was changed to Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín." From this the possibility is not excluded that the author of the Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí intended to lay stress not so much upon the change of names as the change of dignity, the assumption that is, by both of the title of Sultán.

But whatever may be decided about this there can be no question that the name "Shihábu-d-Dín" is just as applicable to the person known more familiarly as Muḥammad Ghorí, as is the name "Muizzu-d-Dín," and Badáoni evidently held this opinion as he henceforth speaks of him constantly as "Shihábu-d-Dín."

On the other hand if this really was a subsequently acquired title it is certainly strange that it does not appear on any of his coins on which he is always styled As Sultán Al-Muazzam (or Al-A'zam) Muizzu-d-Dunyá wad Dín Abú-l-Muẓaffar Muḥammad ibn Sám.

It is not however a point of serious importance as it involves no disputed question of identity.

And in the year 582 H. he came again to Lahore and plundered the surrounding country, and having provided Husain with the means of fortifying and holding Siálkot retraced his steps, and 48. from Tárikh-i-Nizámí which is the original source of this selection we gather that the building of Siálkot took place in this year, in contradiction to the *Mubárahsháhi*² from which we learn that the building of Siálkot was two years earlier. God knows the truth. And inasmuch as the house of history is, like the house of dreams and other things of that sort, ruinous, apologies must be made for discrepancies; and in that year Khusrau Malik with the assistance of the *Khúkhars*³ and other tribes, besieged the fort of Siálkot for a long time, but had to return without attaining his object. In this year also Muizzu-d-Din again besieged Khusrau Sháh in Láhore, who after striving for some days, found himself

Gasnaví ... La petite riviere d'Ayek coule le long de cette forteresse au couchant." Firishta states that Muizzu-d-Din founded the fort of Siálkot which lies between the Chenáb and Rávi and left Husain Kharmíl as governor, in the year 580 H. (1184 A. D.)

¹ Cf. Raverty 452 note 2. See also Tieffenthaler, I. 121. Tatta est tres ancienne ... on la nomme aujourd'hui Dobil Tatta is not the same as Debal which lies between it and Karáchi. See Abul Feda, (Reinaud) I. ccolxxxvi.

The position of Debal. Judging by the map given in Tieffenthaler Debal lay between Karáchi and Tatta at a distance of 30 miles from the former and seventy from the latter, almost due East from Karáchi and N.W. of Tatta. It lay at a distance of about 20 miles from the sea on one of the large arms into which the Mehrán (Indus) divided in those days, but which to judge from modern maps have now disappeared or much diminished in size. It also lay a short distance to the North of Lári Bunder which was at the head of an arm of the sea which had evidently in former times been an arm of the Indus also, at a distance of about ten miles to the South; the arm of the river joining the sea from Debal lay some six miles or so to the westward.

This position tallies with that of the ruined city mentioned by Ibn Batúta, Paris Edition, III. 112, 113, 114, a translation of the description of which is given in Cunningham's Anc. Geog., p. 299, 300.

³ The Khúkhars. This seems to be the same tribe as the Gakkhars, cf. Afn-i-Akbarí (Bl.) Vol. I. 456 note 1, and Vol. II. (J) 383 note 1, but see also Raverty (455 note 4), who asserts that the two tribes are quite distinct.

unequal to the task, and yielded to the Sultán who conveyed him to Ghaznín and sent him to his brother Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín at Firoza Koh. Ghiyásu-d-Dín imprisoned him in one of the fortresses of Ghurjistán, where he died a prisoner, and the plain of Empire once for all passed to the dynasty of Ghor without the thorn of a partner or rival, as has been already mentioned.

QITA'II.

If you saddle the piebald horse of Circumstance, and if the white horse of state leads thee beside him,
 And if the garden of your pleasure in happiness
 copies fair the past memories of Paradise,
 Be not proud, for this mean time will unexpectedly draw its pen through the writing of your fortune.
 Time is like a wind, which at the first draws from the cheek of the rose the veil with all respect, Then after a week has passed in the midst of the garden, drags its body with ignominy to the dust.
 The world at one time brings forward by turn in the narrow course, the horses of honour and disgrace.
 The crafty fowler gives the bird grain, and then draws it into the noose of his artfully laid snare.
 One man who has lost all hope, gains honour,
 Another who is always hopeful in spite of all is disgraced.
 Strange is it if a man who has walked in the shadow of poverty should court a favour from the sun ?
 Be content, if you have a portion of wisdom, that the ignorant should be oppressed by the foolish
 What of that man who, in the assembly of mirth and merriment quaffs the wine of pleasure from the cup of luxuriousness ?
 What of him who sitting behind the wall of sorrow suffers from the after effects of sorrow and the worry of toil ?
 At last the hand of fate takes both of them straight off to the brink of the pit of death.
 Happy is the brave hearted man who like Sharaf draws the foot of fidelity beneath the skirt of retirement.

And in this year Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín left Ali Kirmáj¹ who was governor of Multán, as his Vicegerent in Lahore, and in the year 587 H. coming from Ghaznín he reduced the fort of Tabarhindah² which was the capital of the great rájás of Hindustán, and left Malik Zíáu-d-Dín Tukilí³ with a corps d'elite consisting of one thousand two hundred cavalry soldiers, and was contemplating a return. In the meantime Rái Pathúrá the Governor of Ajmír, and Khandí Rái his brother who had been Governor of Dehlí before Pathúrá, arrived with a vast army at a place called Taráyan⁴ on the banks of the river Sarsuti at a distance of seven *krohs*⁵ from Thánesar. It is now known by the name of Taráwarí⁴ and is distant forty *krohs*⁵ from Dehli. A great conflict ensued with the Sultán and the Muslim troops were defeated. The Sultán evinced great bravery on the field of battle, and in that engagement also Khandí Rái who was mounted on an elephant at the head of his army, received a spear thrust in his mouth from the hand of the Sultán. The Sultán also was struck on the head by the Rái's spear, and his arm was also wounded but both escaped in safety. The Sultán got off his horse and taking up his son Khiljí upon his horse and mounting behind him took him off the field; the Sultán proceeded to Ghaznín, and Rái Pathúrá took the fortress of Tabarhindah from Zíáu-d-Dín Tukilí on peaceable terms after a

From Rennell's map in Tieffenthaler it would appear that the situation of the fortress of Tiberhind, which is there marked though not described in the text, was about half way between Bikanir and Jhunjhú in Rajputáná, that is to say about 100 miles north of Ajmír.

siege of one year and one month. And in the year 588 H. the Sultán again came into Hindustán with a large and brave army of 40,000 cavalry, and divided his forces into four army corps, and having given battle time after time in the place above mentioned gained a victory. Pathúrá was taken prisoner and Khandí Rái having been overcome in battle was killed and hasted to his resting-place in Hell. The Sultán then having reduced the fortresses of Sarsutí¹ and Hánsí proceeded to Ajmír the capital of Pathúrá, reduced it and plundered its environs killing and taking prisoners. From certain other sources we learn that Hazrat Khwájá Muínu-d-Dín Chishtí² may God sanctify his heart, that revered one who is the fountain head of the great and holy men and the dignified elders of the land of Hind, whose blessed tomb is a place of pilgrimage situated in Ajmír, was at that time in the company of the Sultán, and this victory occurred through the impulse of the blessed and divine soul of that pillar of holiness. And in this year leaving Sultán Malik Qutbu-d-Dín Aibak who was his servant and adopted son and vicegerent in the town of Kúhrám which is distant seventy krohs from Dehli, he invaded and plundered the Siwálik range which lies to the North of Hindustán, and proceeded to Ghaznín. In the same year too Qutbu-d-Dín having captured Dehli took it away from the kinsmen of Pathúrá and Khandí Rái. Then in the year 589 H. (1193

The fort of Kol⁴ fell into the hands of Qutbu-d-Dín Aibak, and he made Dehli his capital and brought its surrounding districts under his sway. From that date Dehli once more became the metropolis of the Sultáns. The erection of minarets and other buildings of that kind, such as mosques, was

And in the year 593 H. he conquered Gujerát and took his army to Nahrwálá which is known as Pattan,³ and having taken vengeance for the Sultán on Bhím Raí Dev, and having taken much spoil returned; and in that year Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín removed his effects from the transitory world to the eternal abode,⁴ and Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín having heard this news when on the confines of Tús and Sarakhs,⁵ turned towards Bádghis and performed the duties of the mourning ceremonies and having divided his brother's dominions among his kindred⁶ came to Ghaznín and brought an army against Khwárazm, and on the first occasion Sultán Muḥammad Khwárazm Sháh suffered defeat, and the Sultán pursued him and fought the Khwárazmians at the head of an aqueduct which they had dug from the eastern bank of the Jaihún, and a number of the noted generals of Ghor were martyred and he could not take Khwárazm; he also fought a great battle with an army of Khitái⁷ kings of Turkistán who had come to the help of Sultán Muḥammad,¹ on the banks of the river Jaihún—he fought right bravely but at last was defeated, and being left with a hundred thousand cavalry soldiers he entered the fortress of Andkhúd where he entrenched himself, and having asked for quarter¹ returned to Ghaznín; and at that time the tribe of the Khúkhars in the neighbourhood of Lahore shewed symptoms of revolting the Sultán accordingly brought an army against them, and also summoned Qutbu-d-Dín Aibak from Dehlí, and having given the Khúkhars a severe lesson returned to Ghaznín, and while on the way back was martyred at Damyak,² which is the name of a village of the dependencies of Ghaznín, at the hands of Khúkhars bandits—the following qitá'h has been written to chronicle this event³ :—

The martyrdom of the king of sea and land Shihábu-d-Dín, Whose like has never yet been seen since the world began,
On the third day from the first of Sha'bán, in the year 602
Happened in the road to Ghaznín at the stage Damyak.

The days of his reign from the commencement of the rule of Ghaznín to the end of his life were thirty and two years and some months, and he left no heir save one daughter, but he left behind him much treasure of gold and silver and precious stones, among these latter were five hundred *mans*⁴ of diamonds jewels of great value, besides cash and estates and other property the value of which we may estimate on the same scale. He made expeditions to Hindústán nine times, twice was defeated and seven times was victorious.

Thou didst see Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám, who in war
Was stronger in heart and hand than Sám and Narímán
He obtained, like Maḥmúd, from the elephants of Hindústán

² A village beyond the Indus on the road to Ghaznín. Its exact situation is a matter of some uncertainty. Firishta (Bombay text) has رھتک ! Rohtak.

³ No author that I have seen records the name of the author. The Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí attributes it to "one of the learned men of that period."

⁴ The Tabriz man must be meant, being somewhat less than 2 lbs. while the man of Hindústán varies from 40 to 80 lbs. (Raverty).

The Ain-i-Akbarí makes no mention of the man as a weight unit for jewels. Two sérs are equal to half a man. As the ser was nearly two pounds this would make the man equal to eight pounds nearly. (See Ain-i-Akbarí (Jarrett) II. 366 note 4).

The Tabaqát-i-Náṣirí says 1500 mans of diamonds.

He departed this world, and they say (the writer vouches for it)

That there remained of his secret treasure 500 mans of diamonds.

And in his reign many learned doctors and scientists and poets 53. flourished, of whom was Imám Fakhr-u-d-Dín Rázi¹ may God be merciful to him who wrote the Laṭáif-i-Ghiyáṣi and other books in honour of his brother Sultán Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín Abú-l-Fath. He remained with the army of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sám, and every week used to stand up to preach, and at the termination of his sermon the Sultán used to evince great emotion, and since the Imám got very wearied of this continual coming and going, and everlasting service, one day addressing the Sultán from the pulpit he said Oh ! Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín, some time hence neither will this greatness and glory of yours remain nor the flattery and hypocrisy of Rázi : The following qita'h is by him :

If an enemy does not agree with you O friend
If behoves you to agree with your enemy,
If not, then have patience for a few days
He will not remain, nor will you, nor the pride of Rázi.

And after the assassination of the Sultán certain mischief-makers out of envy accused the Imám of having conspired with the Fidáis,² and asserted that the Imám was well aware of their

See also Majma'ul Fusahá I. p. 374, where he is called Al-Quraishi at-Tamimi, Ibn Khalliqán does not mention the Laṭáif-i-Ghiyáṣi among Ar-Rázi's works, while on the other hand Háji Khalífa gives a work of this name but does not mention the author. His reference to it is as follows. "11124 El-Letáif El-Ghiyathiyeh, subtilitates Ghiyáth-ed-Díní Liber persicus in quatuor partes divisus, quarum prima de principiis religionis, secunda de jurisprudentiâ, tertiâ de ethicâ, quartâ de precatatione agit."

² The term Fidái is particularly applied to the disciples of the chief of the Muláhidah heretics, at whose hands Muizzu-d-Dín met his death according to the express statement of the author of the Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣiri. (See Raverty 485 note 3). This attempt to implicate Rázi in the responsibility for the murder is recorded also in the Jámi'u-t-Tawárikh, and the Táju-l-Mádsir. See Elliott II. p. 236.

hypocrisy. They made an attempt upon the Imám and he fled for refuge to Muaiyyidu-l-Mulk Sinjarí¹ who was one of the distinguished generals of the Sultán; he despatched him in safety to a place of security. A poet has written an ode in praise of him of which the following are two couplets.

Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín Sháh Ghází whose sword in the world has become like the famous Zulfiqár² of Alí Murtazá.

The true Sultán Muḥammad Sám, he whose love for ² Zúl Fiqár. The following is extracted from Ibn Khalliqán (Slane) Vol. IV. p. 220.

"It is related that Hárún ar Rashíd on sending Yazíd ibn Mazyad against Al Walíd gave him Zú'l Fakár the sword which had belonged to the Prophet "Take it, Yazíd, by it you will be victorious." To this Muslím Ibn al-Walíd alludes in the following verse of a kasída composed by him in praise of Yazíd:

'You caused the Prophet's sword to recollect his way of acting and the bravery displayed by the first (Musulmán) who ever prayed and fasted.'

By these last words he meant Alí the son of Abú Talib for he was the person who dealt blows with it."

Lower down, quoting as his authority Hishám ibn al Kalbi, Ibn Khalliqán states that Zúl Fiqár belonged to Al-Aási son of Nabíh, both of whom were killed in the battle of Badr; Al-Aási being slain by 'Alí who took the famous sword from him—and he continues "Another author says that Zúl Faqár was given to 'Alí by the Prophet." I must observe that faqár with an a after the f is the plural of Faqára which means a vertebra of the back. The name of this sword is also pronounced Zúl Fiqár the word fiqár is the plural of fiqra (Vertebra).

At Tabarí states that Zúl fiqár came into the possession of Hárún ar Rashíd in the following manner:

"Zul fiqár was borne by Muḥammad Ibn Abd Allah ibn al Hasan ibn al-Hasan ibn Alí ibn Abí Tálíb on the day in which battle was given to the army of Abú Ja'far al-Manşúr the Abbaside; when he felt death to be near he gave Zúl fiqár to a merchant who had followed him, and to whom he owed four hundred dínárs 'Take this sword,' said he, 'any member of the Abú Tálíb family whom you may meet with will buy it from you and give you the sum to which you are entitled. The sword remained with the merchant till the Abbaside prince Ja'far the son of Sulaimán ibn Alí ibn Aḥd Allah ibn al Abbás ibn Abd-al-Muttalib obtained the governments of Yemen and

And Názukí Marághaí too says in praise of him :—

The heaven brought the Sun into the Balance. ²

Medina, and he purchased it from the merchant for four hundred dínárs. From him it passed to al-Mahdí the Son of Al Maṣṣūr (Khalífah from 775 A.H. to 785 A.H.) from him to Músa al Hádi and from Músa to his brother Hárún ar Rashíd."

Al Asmái relates that he saw Hárún ar Rashíd at Tús wearing a sword and that he said "Asmái would you like to see Zúl fiqár" and on Asmái expressing a wish to see it Hárún ar Rashíd bade him draw the sword—on doing so he found on it eighteen faqáras—The word faqára is said in a note to the above to designate "a sort of waving ornament on the blade or else a notch on its edge. It is doubtful which is meant probably the latter"

The word Zúlfiqár meaning vertebrated I think it quite possible that the sword in question was so called from its strength and pliability, the vertebral column being the type of the combination of these two somewhat incompatible elements.

Subsequently it was called Zυγός (the yoke) by the Latins Jugum and was first formally called Libra in the Calendar of Julius Cæsar. This name seems to have been derived from the East, and must be regarded as a symbol of equality introduced into the heavens at the period when the entrance of the sun into that constellation marked the Autumnal Equinox. "In the commentary of Theon on the Almagest Libra is frequently represented by λίτρα (a pound) or λίτραι, a word originally borrowed by the Romans from the Sicilians, transformed into Libra and then restored to the later Greeks in the new sense of a balance." See Smith's (D. G. R. A.) p. 151, also Aín-i-Akbarí (Jarrett) III. p. 13 and notes. Also Albirúni (Sachau) p. 173, where a table is given of the signs in seven languages. Sir William Jones (Jones' Works Vol. I. p. 334) leans to the opinion that "both Greeks and Hindus received their divisions of the Zodiac from an older nation" and there can be little doubt that this was the case; the almost absolute identity of the nomenclature in Arabic, Greek, Persian, Syriac, Hebrew and Sanskrit points to a pictorial rather than to a verbal original, the more so as in the case of a pictorial symbol of ambiguous shape it was possible for the name to differ in different languages. Thus we know that the sign Libra was first known as χηλαί to the Greeks from its resemblance to the claws of a scorpion, then this name was changed to ζυγός from the resemblance to a yoke, and finally called Libra a balance.

The same pictorial idea is applicable to all three words, and it is more than probable that we must look, for the origin of the Zodiac, to the same source whence we trace the origin of our Alphabet.

SULTÁN QUTBU-D-DÍN AIBAK

Who was one of the specially favourite servants of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín, on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon had a broken little finger,² and was known by this soubriquet (Aibak), they also call him Qutbu-d-Dín³ Lak bakhsh.⁴ With the consent of the nobles of Hindústán he established himself as Protector of the kingdom of Dehlí, and after the martyrdom of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín his brother's son, Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Maḥmúd, the rightful heir of Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Muḥammad in whose praise they wrote the following verse:—

¹ His full titles were: Sultán al-A'zam, Muizzu-d-Dunya wa-d-Dín Abul Muzaffar Muḥammad. On his death difficulties arose as to the succession, the Turkoman generals claiming it for Ghiyásu-d-Dín Maḥmúd, son of Ghiyásu-d-Dín, while the chiefs of Ghúr on the other hand favoured the claims of Baháu-d-Dín Sám, and a quarrel arose between the two parties as to the route to be taken in conducting the corpse of Muizzu-d-Dín to Ghaznín. Eventually this was settled by the diplomacy of the Khwája Muaiyyidu-l-Mulk. Táju-d-Dín Yalduz (Yaldúz) came out to meet the body, which was buried in an enclosed grave which he had built for his daughter, on the 22nd Sha'bán (Firishta).

² This is the reading of the text and of both MSS. and it serves in a measure to correct the current idea as to the etymology of the name Ibak. Raverty (514, note 1) states that Ibak in Turkish means finger. This does not appear to be the case, so far as I can learn from dictionaries ايبك means the comb of a cock, while the word finger is پرمق parmaq. On the other hand the word اي ay means moon and بك beg or bek means Lord. Whether the finger was broken at the time of the eclipse, or whether it was a congenital defect does not appear, but from the text before us the connection with the moon is the cause of the name, not, as has been said, the broken finger. See also Raverty loc. cit. and Thomas' Pathán kings of Dehli, page 32, note 1. Firishta however distinctly states چون انگشت خنصر او شکسته بود اورا ايبک می گفتند if his text is correct.

Sultán from East to West, Monarch from West to East Maḥmúd ibn Muḥammad ibn Sám ibn Husain.

having sent to Malik Quṭbu-d-Dín from Fíroza Koh the canopy and insignia of royalty, addressed him by the title of Sultán,¹ and in the year 602 H. (1295 A.D.) having come from Dehlí to Láhore on Tuesday, the sixteenth of the month of ZuQa'dah in the aforesaid year, ascended the throne of empire and became proverbial for his kindness and clemency. He used to bestow upon deserving recipients rewards far in excess of their anticipations, and inaugurated his custom of lak bakhshi (bestowing laks). One of the learned men of the time named Baháu-d-Dín Ushí² said in praise of him.

Quatrain.

Oh thou that hast brought into the world the bestowal of laks;
Thy hand has brought the mine into great straits;
From envy of thy liberality the heart of the mine has seized blood drops,
And placed them forward pretending that they are rubies.

56. And after some time enmity arose between him and Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, who was one of the slaves of Muizzu-d-Dín and had read the Khutba in his own name in Ghaznín, on account of Láhore, and the fire of war and conflict blazed forth on the confines of the Punjáb; Táju-d-Dín was defeated, and went to Kirmán which was his usual abode. Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín went and took possession of the fort of Ghaznín and staying there for a period of forty days, spent his time in rioting and wantonness and dissipation. Accordingly the people of Ghaznín were annoyed at his behaviour and secretly summoned Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, who arrived without warning, and Sultán Quṭbu-d-Dín not being able to oppose him came to Láhore by way of Sang Surákh³

² Baháu-d-Dín Muḥammad Ushí Farghání was a very famous preacher and learned divine, very famous according to Ufí as an extempore speaker, and an extremely able poetry and prose writer. (Majma'u-l-Fuṣahá, I. 172).

³ One of the routes between Ghaznín and the Punjab, for he did not dare to take that through Kirmán (Raverty, 527, note). The Ṭabaqát-i-Náṣirí omits all reference to this, and merely mentions Quṭbu-d-Dín's death without saying where his fatal accident happened. As to the exact date of his death, see Raverty 528, note 2.

Verse.

When the head of a Sultán becomes unsteady from wine
Without warning the crown of Empire falls from his head.

And after wielding power for some time he fell from his horse when playing chaugán at Láhore in the year 607 H., and died¹ and was buried in that city and his tomb is at present the resort of pilgrims. The period of his reign after the conquest of Hindustán, was twenty years, out of which period he was for four years a Sultán.

This ancient revolving heaven has overthrown many heroes ;
So far as you are able, place no reliance on the sun and moon and Jupiter.²

Seven other individuals of the generals and slaves of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín reached princely power in Hindústán and Ghaznín and Bengála and other places, whose affairs are written in their proper places ; among others Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz on the confines of Taráyan, otherwise known as Taráwarí, having fought with Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín Iyaltamish was taken prisoner. Another is Sultán Náşiru-d-Dín Qabácha³ who is also one of the slaves of Muizzu-d-Dín, and had married one of the daughters of Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, the other daughter was married to Sultán Qutbu-d-

¹ قالب تہی ساخت Literally, emptied the mould (in which he was cast). The word قالب though Arabic in appearance is not really so. It is in reality the Persian word قالب (cf. كالب) in an Arab dress.

The game of chaugán is the origin of the modern game of "polo" the chaugán چوگان called in Arabic صولجان Saulaján is a name applied to a stick with a curved extremity. Curling locks are called چوگان سنبل. A pony which is fit for the game of چوگان is called چوگانی (Burhán-i-Qáfi').

² In the 'Ajáibu-l-Makhlúqát of Qazwíní we find that the astrologers considered the sun as holding the place of king, and the stars are his courtiers and troops. The moon is his Vazír and Jupiter the Qázi. The planet is considered to be a very fortunate one by astrologers who called it سعد اكبر. The moon is also lucky so much so that everything lucky was called by the Hindús Somagraha, Soma being the Sanskrit word for moon. The sun was called 'Aditya,' i.e., the beginning as being the origin of all things. See Albiruni (Sachau) I. 217 and seqq.

Dín and Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín during his lifetime had bestowed upon him the governorship of Uchh and Multán. After the death of Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín, he brought the whole country from Uchh¹ to Sarsutí and Kuhrám under his own rule, and also took possession of Lahore, and having fought with the army of Malik Táju-d-Dín who was on his way from Ghaznín, Khwája Mu'aiyyidu-l-Mulk Sinjarí² being in command of that army, was defeated and went to Sindh in which country he obtained great ascendancy.

57. In the year 611 H. (1214 A. D.) a Moghul army arrived and laid siege to Multán for forty days and the Sultán Náşiru-d-Dín, having opened the doors of the treasury, evinced great bravery and warded off their attacks, and at last after a reign of twenty-two years fell a prisoner into the hands of Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín and trod the way to the next world.³ Another is Malik Baháu-d-Dín Tughral, when Muizzu-d-Dín Muḥammad Sâm reduced the fortress of Bahankar⁴ he entrusted the command of it to Malik Baháu-d-Dín Tughral, and he having built a fortress in the country of Bhasiyána⁵ elected to reside there⁶ and used continually to

³ In the year 612 H. according to the Táju-l-Maásir, but from the text it appears to have been in 610 H. or early in 611 H.

According to Tabaqát-i-Náşirí he was drowned while trying to escape. See Raverty 542-543, notes. cf. Elliott II. 304.

⁴ Both MSS., but according to Tabaqát-i-Náşirí and Alfí the name of the fort was Thankír or Thangír. (See however Raverty 544 note 1).

⁵ MS. (B) has Bhasiyána, MS. (A) has Bhayána. Tabaqát-i-Náşirí says "the fortress of Thankír which is in the territory of Bhiána." This fortress he built was called Sultán Kot (Tabaqát-i-Náşirí).

Tieffenthaler mentions a place which he calls Beána and says, concerning it, Beána était autrefois une ville bien peuplée, aujourd'hui le nombre de ses habitans est fort diminué, apres que le Rajáh Indou en a chassé, il n'y-a que peu d'années, les Mahometans, Afgans, et Saïdes, qui se vantent de descendre de la race d'Alí. Elle est au pied des montagnes, à 14 milles communs de Fatepour au Sud-Ouest.

He mentions no fortress named Thankír or Bahankar nor does he mention Sultán Kot.

harass the environs of Gwáliár, and Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín at the time of his return from Gwáliár had promised to give that fortress to Malik Baháu-d-Dín who accordingly strongly fortified a position at a distance of two krohs from Gwáliár and harassed the garrison of the fort, so that after a year the garrison sending messengers and presents invited Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín and surrendered the fort to him. On this account enmity arose between Malik Qutbu-d-Dín and Baháu-d-Dín. Malik Baháu-d-Dín died a short time afterwards.¹

Another is Malik Muḥammad Bakhtyár Ghúrí.² He was one of the great men of Ghúr and Garmsír, a man adorned with all good qualities who came to Ghaznín in the reign of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín and from thence went to Hindústán. He did not approve of having to live in Láhore with Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín, and joined hands with Malik Husainu-d-Dín Ughal Beg³ ruler of the country between the two rivers (The Doáb) and the country beyond the river Ganges, and Kanpilah and Patíálí⁴ were allotted as his reward. He proceeded to Oudh and conquered that coun-

² Called also Muḥammad Bakhtyár Khiljī, the first to lead a Musulmán invasion of Bengal in 596 A. H. He belonged to the Khilj tribe of Ghúr, a Turkish tribe. Regarding him the Ain-i-Akbarī states that the astrologers had predicted the overthrow of the kingdom of Nadiya by Muḥammad Bakhtyár Khiljī. He destroyed the city of Nadiya (in 1203 A. D., 600 A. H.) and transferred the Capital to Lakhnautí. From that time Bengal has been subject to the kings of Dehli. Ain-i-Akbarī (Jarrett) II. 148.

He was a nephew of Muḥammad son of Maḥmúd. (See Tabaqát-i-Násirí 549): Raverty denies his having ever been a slave but from the statement in the text there seems to be no doubt that the author so regarded him. (See Raverty, p. 550 note 6).

Maliku-l-Muazzam Husainu-d-Dín Ughul Beg held in fief a considerable tract of country in the Doáb, independently of Qutbu-d-Dín.

 58 Sultán, and received great favours and distinctions; the grandees of the court seeing they were powerless against him, became envious of him, and instigated the Sultán to such an extent that one day he made him fight with a rogue elephant,² but he struck the elephant so hard upon the trunk with a heavy club that the elephant turned and fled. The Sultán was overwhelmed with astonishment to see this, and nominated and appointed him ruler of the whole country of Lakhnautí³ in Bengála and sent him away. In the second year after this arrangement Muḥammad Bakhtyár brought an army from Behár towards Lakhnautí and arrived at the town of Núdiyá⁴ with a small force, Núdiyá is now in ruins. ¹ For an account of the birth of Lakhmaniya see Tabaqát-i-Akbarí which relates that in order to delay the birth for two hours his mother caused herself to be suspended head downwards with her legs bound together till the auspicious moment predicted by the astrologers to ensure his reigning for eighty years arrived, immediately after delivery of her child the mother died. (see also Raverty Tabaqát-i-Nasirí, p. 555).

² There is no authority for the statement that Gaur was ever known by the name of Muḥaminad Bakhtyár. Concerning the name Gaur see Hunter Imp. Gaz. Gaur.

As to this passage see Raverty 559 note 3. See Thomas Pathán Kings of Dehli p. 37 and p. 110, and notes. It appears unlikely that Muḥammad Bakhtyár issued coins in his own name, as he was nothing more than Sipahsálár of the Sultán Muizzu-d-Din Muḥammad Sám: moreover no such coins are known.

⁴ A chief of the tribes of Kúneh and Míj called Ali Míj (Tabaqát-i-Nasirí) tribes between Tibet and Lakhnauti.

⁵ Regarding this the Tabaqát-i-Nasirí says that a chief of one of the here crossed their route called the Brahmanputr,¹ which they also call Brahmkadí. It is three or four times the size of the Ganges. Sháh Garshasp² when he came to Hindustán built a bridge over that river, and crossed it at Kámrúd and went on his way. Muḥammad Bakhtyár crossed by that bridge, and leaving certain of his trusted generals to protect the bridge and command the road, entered the territory of Tibet, and spent ten days among the mountains and difficult roads, and at last arrived at a plain in mountain tribes between Lakhnautí and Tibbat the Kúñch-Mij-and Tibharú who are all of Turkish countenance (همه ترك چهره اند) and speak a language differing both from that of India and that of Tibbat, adopted the religion of Islám and agreed to act as guide to Muḥammad Bakhtyár whom he conducted to a place where there is a city called Mardhan Koṭ (or Bardhan koṭ) :.. in front of which flows a vast river called the Bang Matí and when it enters the country of Hindustán they style it Samundar in the Hindí dialect; in magnitude, width, and depth it is three times the size of the Ganges.

From this point the account differs, the Tabaqát-i-Násirí says that they journeyed up the river for ten days among the mountains till they came to an old bridge built of hewn stone, &c.

Our text on the other hand states that they crossed the old bridge immediately on reaching the river after which they journeyed for ten days in the mountains, &c.

Badáoní's statement has more prima facie probability, the statements of the Tabaqát-i-Násirí moreover are somewhat confused and contradictory. Neither author mentions how long the cavalry force took to reach Bardhan.

It seems fairly certain from Badáoní's account that the city of Bardhan was on the near side of the river and that the crossing of the river was impracticable at that point, how far it was from Kámrúd, where Badáoní says they crossed by the bridge; does not appear.

MS. (A) ابردين Abardín; MS. (B) ابردهن Abardhan.

Tabaqát-i-Násirí says Bardhan (Raverty 561 note 8). Calcutta text has مردھن کوٹ.

For a full discussion of the identity of the river crossed and the place of crossing see Raverty pp 561-565. The only additional information given by the text is that the bridge was at Kámrúd, and it seems not impossible that it may be the bridge of Sil Hako and the river the Brahmaputra though Raverty thinks it was the Teesta.

which was a fort of great strength: the garrison of that fort who were descendants of Gushtasp (that fort too was one of the buildings erected by Gushtasp) came forth to fight, and fought so bravely till nightfall that many men were lost on the side of Muḥammad Bakhtyār. He pitched his camp on that very spot, and coming down received tidings that five farsangs beyond this city there was another city¹ from which 50,000 Turks all warlike and ready for battle would come to the relief of their city. The following day Muḥammad Bakhtyār not thinking it advisable to remain there, and not being able to oppose them, turned back and came to the head of the bridge. Before his arrival the Generals in charge of the road had fought among themselves, and the infidels had broken two arches of that bridge. The army of Muḥammad Bakhtyār had this bridge in front and the infidels kept coming up in their rear, and fought with determined bravery. In that neighbourhood there was an idol temple of great strength.² They passed the night there by some stratagem, and in the morning a ford was found, and a party of men who crossed by the ford found the sand of the river was a sort of quicksand, and the water of the river gradually growing deeper and deeper, the greater part of the soldiers of Muḥammad Bakhtyār were drowned in the ocean of destruction, and the remnant which remained became fuel for the fire of the infidel's sword and attained the exaltation of martyrdom. Muḥammad Bakhtyār, out of many thousand men, arrived at Deo Kot with some three or four hundred only, and fell ill from vexation and was attacked by hectic fever³ and used to say "no doubt Sultan Muḥammad Muizz-ud-Din Sâm has met with an accident that fortune has gone so against me." And when weakness took possession of him 'Alí Mardán one of Muḥammad Bakhtyār's greatest generals arrived at Deo Kot from the district of Nárnálí⁴ and finding him bedridden, pulled down the sheet from his face and ruthlessly despatched him with one blow of a dagger. This event happened in the year '602 H. after the death of Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín: and after the death of Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín this same Alí Mardán eventually seized the reins of power by great craft, and promulgating the khutba and sikka of Lakhnauti in his own name was styled Sultán Aláu-d-Dín, and from the excessive folly and pride and arrogance of his mind sat quietly in Lakhnauti and divided the country of Irán and Túrán among his adherents, and no one dared to say "these dominions are outside the scope of the Sultán's power why do you divide them?" They say that some unfortunate merchant laid a complaint of poverty before Aláu-d-Dín, who asked "where does this fellow come from?" They answered "from Iṣfahán" then he ordered them to write a document to Iṣfahán which should have the force of an assignment of land to him. The merchant would not accept this document, but the Vazírs did not dare to represent this fact and reported "the ruler of Iṣfahán, by reason of his travelling expenses and assembling his retinue for the purpose of subjugating that country, is in difficulties." He thereupon ordered them to give a large sum of money far beyond his expectations; and when his tyranny and oppression exceeded all bounds the Amírs of Khilj consenting together put him to death and raised to the throne Malik Husámu-d-Dín Khilj who was one of the nobles of Khilj and Garmsír and one of the servants of Muḥammad Bakhtyár. The reign of Alí Mardán lasted thirty-two years.²

Another was Malik Husáinu-d-Dín³ abovementioned who became possessed of the whole country of Tírhut and Bengála and Jáj Nagar and Kámrúd and gained the title of Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín, till in the months of the year 622 H., he sent to the Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín Iyaltimish thirty-eight head of elephants and Malik Náṣiru-d-Dín Muḥammad ibn² Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín went from Oudh to Lakhnautí at the instigation of some of the Amírs,³ and Ghiyáṣu-d-Dín⁴ who at that time had taken an army from Lakhnautí to Kámruḍ turned back, and fought a severe battle with Malik Náṣiru-d-Dín and was taken prisoner together with the majority of his generals and was put to death. The duration of his reign was twelve years.⁵ The mention of these few kings of the regions of Hindustán incidentally with the affairs of the Sultáns of Dehlí was both opportune and necessary, and the affairs of the remaining Muizzíyeh kings who attained to the Sultānat of Multán and other kingdoms are mentioned in other places.

Iyaltimish or Altamish as he is generally called was the first sovereign who reigned in Dehli with independent power. He received a diploma of investiture from the Khalíf of Baghdád [Al-Mustansir b-illáh, A. H. 626] a most important recognition to a Muḥammedan sovereign and one that is remarkable as being the earliest notice taken by the arrogant court of Baghdád of this new Indo-Muḥammedan kingdom. born under these circumstances Iyaltimish.¹ His father was the chief of many of the tribes of Turkestan. His kinsmen under pretence of taking him for a walk took Iyaltimish into a garden and sold him like Joseph to a merchant, from there he happened to be taken to Bokhára, and thence in the time of Sultán Muḥammad Sám to Ghaznín; and in these days Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín after the conquest of Nahrwálah and the taking of Gujrát had gone to Ghaznín, and since without permission of Sultán Muḥammad Sám no one could purchase Iyaltimish he asked permission from the Sultán to sell him. Sultán Muḥammad Sám said that since he had given orders that no one there should buy that slave they were to take him to Dehli and sell him there. Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín after his return from Ghaznín bought a slave named Ibak, a namesake of his own, and Iyaltimish, at Dehli for 100,000 tangahs: at first he called him Amír Tamghách,² and appointed him to the Amírship of Tabarhindah,³ and at the time when Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín fought with Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz, Ibak his slave tasted the cup of death. At that time he made Iyaltimish an especial favourite, and after the capture of Gwáliár he made him Governor of that place, and subsequently bestowed upon him the rule of Baran⁴ and its environs, and since he began to shew signs of extraordinary hardiness he entrusted the country of Badáún to him, and in the war of Muizzu-d-Dín with the Khúkhars (as has been already related), Iyaltimish having got together a huge army from Badáon and the foot of the hills, joined hands with Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín in the service of Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín, and armed as he was having forced his horse into the river⁵ engaged the enemy bravely several times: Sultán Muizzu-d-Dín bestowed on him fitting honours and distinguished him royally and gave him high recommendations to Malik Qutbu-d-Dín, and went to the greatest possible lengths in his care for him; and that same day Malik Qutbu-d-Dín wrote his letter of emancipation, and by degrees raised him to the dignity of Amír-ul-Umará (Chief of the Amírs) till his affairs reached the height they did. And in the beginning of his reign certain of the Muizzíyeh and Qutbíyeh Amírs rebelled against him and suffered punishment and became food for the pitiless sword. And Malik Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz after he had suffered defeat by the Army of Khwárazm obtained possession of Lahore; Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín coming from Delhi to meet him in the year 612 H. drew up in battle order on the confines of Taráyan which is known as Serái Taláwarí.¹ After a severe battle Sultán Táju-d-Dín Yaldúz being defeated fell a prisoner into the hands of Shamsu-d-Dín who sent him to Badáon. The bird of his soul there escaped from the prison house of the body and took its flight to the nest of the next world. His tomb is in that city.

¹ Concerning the origin of the name see Thomas, p. 44, note 1. The note is too long to transcribe here, but briefly it may be said that Mr. Redhouse to whom the above text was submitted by Mr. Thomas thinks it probable that owing to errors of transcribers of the Turkish compound word the ل has become displaced and that the word should really be written ایتلمش ay-tutulmash = eclipse of the moon.

This explanation seems most plausible. In Turkí the word التمش altamsh means the advanced guard of an army, or the number sixty.

64. And in the year 614 H. Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín came into conflict with Sultán Náşiru-d-Dín Qabácha who had married the two daughters of Sultán Qutbu-d-Dín one after the other, and was in possession of Uchh and Multán, and victory rested with Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín, and for the third time² Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín went up in person against him. He, having fortified the castle of Uchh, himself went to the fortress of Bhankar, and Nizámul-Mulk Wazír Jandí pursued him while the Sultán reduced Uchh. After hearing the news of the capture of Uchh, Náşiru-d-Dín sent his own son Bahrám Sháh into the presence of the Sultán and sued for peace. Bhankar also was captured. And in the year 615 H. Náşiru-d-Dín was overwhelmed in the sea of destruction in the Punjáb, and surrendered the property of life to the flood of death, and the Sultán turning back came to Delhi. In the year 618 H. Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín raised an army against Sultán

Jalálu-d-Dín Mangburní¹ son of Khwárazm Sháh who having suffered defeat at the hands of Changíz Khán after Táju-d-Dín, came to Ghaznín and thence from fear of the incursions of Changíz Khán had gone to Lahore with his family and relations; and Sultán Jalálu-d-Dín not being able to withstand him went towards Sindh and Siwistan and from there by way of Kuch and Makrán arrived at Kirmán and Iráq.²

And in the year 622 H.³ Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín, took an army towards Behár and Lakhnautí and brought Sultán Ghiyásu-d-Dín Khiljí, who has been before mentioned, into obedience, and having accepted the present above mentioned,⁴ established the khutba and sikka in his own name⁵ and having given his elder son the title of Sultán Náşiru-d-Dín Maḥmúd⁶ made him his heir, and having made over that country to him returned to the metropolis of Delhi. Eventually Malik Náşiru-d-Dín Maḥmúd having fought with Ghiyásu-d-Dín on the confines of Lakhnautí got the upper hand, and having taken him prisoner put him to death, and great booty fell into his hands which he divided into portions and sent it as rewards⁷ to each of the nobles of Dehli. 65.

¹ So called because of a mole which he had on his nose (Raverty 285, note 3). He was the last of the Khwarazm Sháhi dynasty. He is said to have turned devotee and to have lived till 688 H (Raverty 299, note.) There is some question as to the orthography of this name. Thomas p. 90, note 1, judging from inscriptions on his coins calls him Mankburnin, as he considers the final letter to be ن n not ی i. The etymology given above is probably correct as the word مینگ (meng) in Turkí means grain de beauté while بورون means "nez" (Dict. Turk. Orientale Pavet-de Courteille) the word originally being مینگبورون mengbúrún would in Persian have become altered in pronunciation to منگیرن mangburun and with the addition of the yá-i-nisbat منكبرنی Mangburní.

It is a well known story that Sultán Shamsu-d-Dín was a man of a cold temperament, and once upon a time he desired to consort with a pretty and comely girl, but found that he had not the power. The same thing happened several times: one day the girl was pouring some oil on the head of the Sultán and shed some tears upon the Sultán's head. He raised his head and asked the cause of her weeping, after a great deal of hesitation she answered: I had once a brother who was bald like you and that reminded me of him, and I wept. Lord of the world on him be peace, remains concealed as by a curtain—men speak and write less concerning them, nay more they do not even possess them—accordingly in harmony with the saying, The first comer has the best of it, I have thought it incumbent upon me to include a few odes from that eminent author as a benediction and blessing, in this composition of mine, and to leave a memorial for his friends, and to establish my own connection with the master, and to display upon the dais of evidence the excellencies of that doughty knight of the arena of eloquence, and more especially to fulfil the demands of fellow-citizenship. The master poet Shihāb¹ Muhamra [Badāonī] then says as follows:—

I am Alif in the table of existence and of no value as a sign.²

My existence depends upon the duration of the existence of others, my own existence is transitory.

I stand at the end of the row³ in the hope of obtaining a better position, having rested from all movement with the attributes of insignificance.

I have not the attributes of Alif for Alif has no crookedness.⁴

All my writing has become crooked on the page of desire.

There is the song of the nightingale, the rose is happy; while I am careless like the lily.⁵

² Alif stands for 1, in the numerical value of letters, and is looked upon as having no intrinsic value, but merely serving as the starting place or origin for other numbers.

In its literal value also it is ساکن بالذات that is, it has no capability of being pronounced till it is compounded with some other sign such as ٲ hamza.

³ Alif must stand at the end either of a word as in بقا baqā, or a syllable as in قامت qāmat. The Alif at the commencement has a hamza.

⁴ MSS. (A), (B) کرمی ندرد

⁵ The lily is said by the poets not to be affected by the song of the nightingale and to remain speechless, cf. Hāfiz.

حیفست بلبللی چو من اندر چنین چمن

با این لسان عذب که خامش چو سوسنم

Pity it is that such a nightingale as I living in such a garden and having so sweet a tongue should be silent as the lily.

Like Alif I have no tongue, what have I to do with ten tongues¹ ?

Since I can seize it² while thus at rest, Why should I pursue?

Since I cannot see openly how can I follow a hidden path ?

By stratagem, I can recognize no distinction between earth and heaven, although I am like the heaven in my whirling, and like the earth stationary.

I am not like water in freshness, nor like fire in sublimity, nor like the wind in sweetness, nor like the earth in heaviness.

¹ The ten tongues of the lily are of frequent mention in Persian poetry, cf. Hāfiz.

بسان سوسن اگر ده زبان شود حافظ
چو غنچه پیش تو اش مهر بودهن باشد

Were Hāfiz like the lily endowed with ten tongues
His lips in thy presence would remain sealed like the lips of the rosebud.
also

ز سر و قامت — ت بنشیدم — م آزاد
همه تن گر زبان باشم چو سوسن

I sit alone utterly heedless of thy cypress-like form
Even though like the lily my body were cleft into tongues.

The lily سوسن Sūsan is of four varieties. The white variety is called Sūsan-i-āzād, see Burhān-i-qāṭi s. v. سوسن; according to the Baḥru-l-jawāhir its properties are those of heat and dryness and it is useful in the headaches of fever.

The Makhzanu-l-adwīya states that the word Sūsan is an Arabicised form of the Syrian Sūsānī. The article may be consulted for further information regarding the varieties and properties of these lilies. The linear leaves of the lily are compared to tongues.

I am not made out of these four elements.¹ I am composed of the effluvia of the kennel. The refuse of the sewer water has boasted of piety.²

My wisdom, as though incarnate, seems to have taken to praise my faults; my avarice,³ huge as a mountain, has girded its loins for taking presents.

I am become fixed in the way of avarice, not a sign of truth remains in me. The oppression of my vices has overwhelmed the mercies of the Sacred Book.

My greediness has so deceived me that the five sensual appetites have taken away from my heart with disgrace the blessings of the readings⁴ of the 'ashars.

My inner nature as well as my body is devoid of meditation and recollection. My eye like my ear is inclined to the singing women and their songs.

I desire brilliant speeches to fall from my tongue which is like a well-tempered sword. My pen has made me bent like a sickle⁵ in the pursuit of my daily bread.

My speech has failed me because its glory was in the relation of this story. Yes! all this loss of honour was owing to inordinate desire for bread.

I am that mean one, less than the least, who am not worth a groat,⁶ if you think me worth a barleycorn, you will not buy me for nothing.

You are corrupt like the wind, you stand paralysed like the earth.
You are a pearl of transitory existence, a shell empty-mouthed.
With breath like the burning lightning you are the enchanter

¹ And in the pursuit of the fairy-faced ones with chainlike locks, through desire often have I bound fast, like the ant, my life to my waist with my heart.

And for the sake of the ant-eyed and sugar-lipped ones, in my fancy I have bored the hair of speech a hundred ways by way of trial.

That I might have a store like the ant,² in his praise I have cleft the hair into halves, and have not received one jot from any one in recognition.

Henceforth, like the ant, I will gird my loins at the door of the Incomparable one, and from the root of each hair,³ with a hundred tongues will I proclaim his gracious aid.

How can I open my lips, I that am voiceless as an ant and a fish. Nay rather will I make each hair a tongue to scatter pearls.

With this ant-like writing and these sugar-like words,⁴ by means of poetical arrangement I will split the hair in the declaration of the unity of God the discerners of secrets.

77. The intellect herein cannot understand, even by a hair's breadth, the reason why the offspring of the powerful lion should become the prey of the powerless ant.

In his decree there is not the space of a hair's point open to criticism, even though he should give the kingdom of a Solomon to an ant without recompense.²

By his decree, the shape of the ant and the lion are similar, and by his art the colour of hair and bone are opposites.

By his grace it is that every hair has knowledge of him, and from his equity it comes to pass that there is a ³ guardian over every ant, that ³ dust in the palm is endowed with chemical properties, and water in the sea becomes converted into pearl; ⁴ that the ant appears to the eye as a dragon, and a hair of the limbs as a spear.⁵

¹ It is said that the ants attack the newly born lion cub as yet unprotected by hair and kill it. The Arabs call the ant ابو مشغول Father Busy and أم نبرية Mother Turnabout, and have some curious legends about them and regard them with somewhat of superstitious awe. They say that to see in a dream ants entering a house betokens prosperity to its owner, while to see ants crawling on the carpet betokens prolific offspring. The appearance of flying ants in a house where there is a sick person betokens his death, and on no account, they say, should ants be permitted to crawl over any one lying sick (Haiātū-l-Haiwā). They say also that the ant has no stomach, and that it lives upon the air it breathes, and that it never sleeps.

It is used as a dessert by the Persians by whom it is regarded as an exhilarant, and as clearing the voice. Its wood is soft and light. [The article from which the above is extracted may be consulted for an account of its properties].

The Burhān-i-Qāṭi states that a drink is made from the flowers which relieves the after effects of drinking, and the ashes of the burnt wood are used as a hair dye and hair restorer.

² MS. (A) سر نیچید The metre shews this reading to be right.

³ This story is related as follows in the Haiātu-l-Qulūb ;—

One day the Prophet was sitting alone when an Arab came who had caught a lizard and had it in his sleeve. He asked the people who that was sitting there, they answered God's prophet; he replied, addressing Muḥammad, "I swear by Lāt and 'Uzzā that I consider you my greatest enemy and were I not under an oath to my tribe, I would certainly kill you." The prophet said "Accept the true faith." The Arab cast the lizard from his sleeve and said "I will never accept the faith till this lizard does." Then the prophet spoke to the lizard saying, "Oh thou lizard." The lizard answered him in choice Arabic saying "I am thy servant, Oh thou ornament of the Muslims." The prophet asked "Whom dost thou worship?" He replied "That God who is in Heaven and Earth, whose kingdom is in the earth and his wonders in the sea, and his marvels in the deserts. Him I worship who knows what is in the womb, and has established his punishment in the fire." The prophet asked "Who am I?" the lizard replied, "Thou art the prophet of the upholder of the world, and the seal of prophecy. He is rightly guided who believes in thee, and he is lost who denies thee." The Arab said—"I require no more cogent proof than this; when I approached thee, I had no greater enmity to any one than to thyself, but now I hold thee dearer than my life, my father and my mother." (Haiātu-l-Qulūb by Āghā Muḥammad Bāqir Majlisī.)

⁴ شق القمر See Qur'ān, Sūrah 54. "The hour draws nigh, and the moon is split asunder" (Sacred Books of the East Vol. IX). In the حيات القلوب Haiātu-l-qulūb a MS. copy of which dated 25th Zūl Hijjah 1087 A. H. (1676 A. D.) is before me. I find the following account of the miracle performed by the prophet Muḥammad at Mekka. "The tribe of Qoreish sought as a sign from Muḥammad the performance of some miracle; the prophet pointed to the moon and by the power of God Most High it split into two halves. A trustworthy Ḥadīṣ by Ḥazrat Imām Ja'far Ṣādiq has come down to us, relating that fourteen infidels who were desirous of working

He lived like ants upon the earth in the midst of poverty,
For this reason the heaven appeared in his eyes as inferior in value to an eyelash.

In that place where the angels would have always cast their wings like ants,

If he had placed his foot even one hair's breadth beyond his abode.

So that, for the sake of an ant, intercession was not heavy to him even by the weight of a hair.

If for the sake of an ant one fell into error, he would make his excuse.

He remained without bounty if he was not thankful in the least.

On that night when he caught the least glimpse of that illuminated dwelling

Wings² grew upon him like the ant in his desire for the infinite.

Having cast his eye upon the fat morsel of the world which perishes like a hair, he closed the avenues of his appetite against this turquoise-hued table,³ like the ant.

the prophet's destruction came to him on the evening of the 14th of Zūl Hijjah and said to him, 'Every prophet has shewn some wonderful miracle, so this evening we desire you to shew us some great miracle.'
The prophet asked what miracle they desired him to shew them. They replied, 'If you have any power from God order the full moon to divide into two halves.' Thereupon the angel Gabriel came down from heaven and said to Muḥammad, 'The Lord of heaven and earth sends greeting and has ordered all things to become obedient to you.' Then the Prophet raised his eyes to heaven and commanded the moon to divide into two halves, whereupon it split into two parts, and the prophet knelt to shew his gratitude to Almighty God. All authorities relate that this took place in Mekka; and further it is related that when certain travellers arrived they said in answer to questions 'We too saw on that night that the moon was in two halves.' Consequently the infidels believed that it was a true miracle and not merely magic." He also relates that these infidels imposed upon Muḥammad the task of restoring the moon to its original condition, and also of turning one-half of the orb of the moon black while the other half was bright.

And he also wrote in praise of Sultān Ruknu-d-Dīn Fīroz 80. imposing upon himself the necessity of introducing four things³ as follows:—

Every moment this old wolf lion-hearted infant-eating⁴

Does with me that which the elephant and rhinoceros do at the time of contest.

The elephant-like sky wears away my body as does the rhinoceros

The time like a lion takes away my patience like a wolf.

I have not the strength of the rhinoceros, and the sky is like a fierce elephant towards me.

It displays the boldness of a lion like the old wolf of the time.

The elephant did not so treat the rhinoceros, nor did the wolf so treat the sheep

As the lion-like heaven treated this being who is thin as hair from oppression.

The Lion of the sky has the craft of the wolf and the strength of the rhinoceros.

For this cause he heaps pain continually on my heart like the load of an elephant.

² پیلبند A stratagem in the game of chess. See Albirūnī (India) I. 183-184. The فیل or elephant it appears had the same mobility as the queen does in our modern game, that is it commanded both rank and diagonal.

There was one pawn known as the Piyāda-i-Aṣlī or original pawn, which had certain privileges attached to it. It was permitted once in the course of the game to remove to any square on the board where it might inflict the greatest injury on the adversary, as by attacking two pieces at once—"forking" them as chess players call it: under certain combinations this pawn was utilised to give mate. Thus in Auhādī's Life of Khwāja 'Alī Shatranjī we find

خواجہ دقان علی شطرنجی کہ چون رخ بعرض فکرت نہادی شاہان
سخن را دواسپ و فیل طرح دادی منصورہ باز خیال در فیلبند حیرت پیادہ مات افتادی

"When he moved his Rukh in the Board of imagination he gave the odds of two Knights and the Bishop to the kings of rhetoric: the strategist of imagination fell into the pawn's mate from the "Fīlband" of confusion."

This (فیلبند) was explained to me by a Muhammadan friend, a chess player, thus: suppose the white king at his own square, and a hostile pawn on his second square guarded by Black Bishop at Q. Kt. 4, the adversary brings his other Bishop to Q. R. 4 (ch) mate, white having other moves, but none which can prevent this final move of the Black Bishop.

The Baḥr-i 'Ajam gives the following definition of پیلبند.

پیلبند نام یکی از منصوبہای شطرنج - و پیلبند دادن عبارت از مات کردن بکشت پیل •

Pīlband is the name of a manœuvre in chess. "To give pīlband" means to mate by giving check with the Bishop (Pīl).

چو در جنگ پیلان کشائی کند

When in contest with elephants thou disengagest thy noose. Thou defeat-est the king of Qanauj with the "pīlband" (Nizāmī).

The wolf of my patience casts off from him the waterproof like a lion, if the elephant of this coerulean castle has made me over to his charge like a rhinoceros.

The lion of the sky, like the elephant in colour, a wolf by a nature, takes and tears to pieces the armour of my patience like the hide of the rhinoceros.¹

Last night when the lion of the sky became elephant coloured in the hide of the rhinoceros, countless Josephs² appeared from the wolves of the heaven.

My life is in the hands of the lion, and under the foot of the rhinoceros of pain, until from the elephant bodied sky the tail of the wolf³ became evident. 81.

The claw of the lion and the horn of the rhinoceros, the tears of the elephant and the hair of the wolf.

Although these four are of use in making the amulet⁴ of heart's attachment.

Of what use are the special properties of the lion and rhinoceros and the wolf and the elephant, when that silvery cheeked one demands from me gold more than the weight of an elephant.

Since I do not possess the ferocity of the rhinoceros, the heart of the lion, and the breath of the wolf, I will go to meet my beloved with an elephant load of sorrow.

Hasan Dehlavi also says.

My beloved with the rhinoceros-hilted sword is trotting like a wolf, I, like the elephant, am following him with a body thin as thread.

Afterwards the wolf in rhinoceros-like armour, the elephant-like heaven, the lion-hunter of the sky appeared like the torch of the king.

The pillar of the world, the elephant-conquering king with the lion-headed mace, by whose wolf-swift horse the rhinoceros is fiercely attacked.

The eye of the wolf of the sky is of all colours from his lion-like mace, the hump of the rhinoceros of the earth is trodden into hollows by the foot of his elephant.

His elephantine club empties the forest of wolves, his wolf-swift horse¹ seizes the meadow from the lions.

His rhinoceros-like staff of office is in the heart of the wolf of the sky, his club² like a pillar has cleft asunder the lions.

From the point of his javelin, and lion-headed mace, that happens to the wolf and elephant which happened to the life of Gurgsār from the sword of the 'brazen-bodied one.'³

When thou brandishest ³ thy elephantine mace, the lion casts away its teeth, the wolf its claws, the rhinoceros its gall bladder, and the snake its head-stone.⁴

Rhinoceros-like in attack, wolf-like in gait, lion-like in bravery, elephant-like in body is thy steed, Oh hero! hundreds of thousands like Rustam are thy slaves.

It has an emerald colour, inclined to black or ashy, shaped like a square signet stone; weight from one to two miṣqāls.

The other is an animal product which is found in the hinder part of the head of certain vipers. It is not found in all vipers, in fact it is only rarely found in any of them; when it is taken from the muscles it is soft but in contact with the air becomes stony hard. In size it is about the size of half a shell, (cowrie) oblong in shape, ashy-coloured. Certain stones are black and hard, striped with three white stripes, others are white and soft. Some are artificial. In order to distinguish the good and true from the false, place it upon the bite of a snake, it will stick to it if genuine. If milk is poured on it, the milk becomes clotted and changed in appearance; and it is said that when some of them are placed in milk the milk does not become coagulated: and when all the poison has been extracted by the stone it falls off, refusing Jundi (Junaidi) Chief Wazir.¹ Antagonism and strife shewed itself among the Amirs, and Sultān Razziyah formed an excellent plan, and threw these disloyal Amirs into confusion so that they fled in all directions, and she having selected certain of them for punishment put them to death,² and Nizāmu-l-Mulk retired to Sir Mūr³ and took up his abode in the secret place of death, and Khwāja Muhazzab the Deputy succeeded him in office. The kingdom of Razziyah gained considerable power, she despatched an army to relieve Rantanbhūr,⁴ which, after the death of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn, the Hindūs had invested continuously, and liberated the Muslims from their captivity, and Jamālu-d-Dīn Yāqūt, the Abyssinian, who was Master of the Horse, became her confidant and trusted adviser, to such a point that Sultān Razziyah whenever she rode horse or elephant used to rest upon his arm or shoulder.⁵ He became an object of envy to the Amirs, and the Sultān Razziyah came out from the curtain of chastity⁶ and wearing the garments of men, regardless of propriety, used to wear a tunic and *kullāh*⁷ when seated on the throne to rule the kingdom. And in the year 637 H. (1239 A.D.) Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Iyāz, Governor of Lahore, displayed hostility. Sultān Razziyah proceeded against him and having reduced him to obedience added Multān also to his jāegir,⁸ and in the same year she brought up an army against

Next succeeded to the throne, and came to Delhī. At this time Malik Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn Altūniyah⁵ the ruler of Tabarhindah having espoused the Sultān Razziyah, and having gained over certain of the Amīrs and a body of the Jats⁶ and Khūkhars, and all the landholders, brought an army towards Delhī. Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Bahrām Shāh, sent the Malik⁷ Balban the younger (who eventually became Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn) with a vast army to oppose Razziyah, and a battle ensued in which the forces of Razziyah were defeated. She then went to Tabarhindah, and a second time collected her forces and rallied her scattered troops, and arrived in the neighbourhood of the village of Katīhal⁸ with the intention of conquering Delhī, and again being defeated at the hands of the Malik Balban the younger, took to flight and both she and Altūniyah fell into the hands of the Kawārs¹ and were put to death by order of Sultān Bahrām Shāh.

This event took place in the year 637 H. (1239 A.D.),² and the duration of the reign of Razziyah was three years six months and six days.

When the sovereign power was firmly established in the hands of Sultān Bahrām Shāh, Malik Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn Ītkin who was formerly Hājib and was married to a sister of the Sultān, and had got all the affairs of the kingdom into his own hands by the assistance of Nizāmu-l-Mulk Muhazzabu-d-Dīn, being accustomed always to keep a large elephant tied up at his door, like a king, was murdered in the year 638 H. together with Muhazzabu-d-Dīn Wazīr, by certain Fidāis,³ by the orders of the Sultān, and in this year the Sultān dealt with a party composed of Amirs and chief men, and leading nobles, and grandees, and judges who used to hold secret meetings to discuss a change of monarchy and the appointment of a new king. Some of them he put to death, and

It seems probable that the Kawārān here spoken of were a tribe of Jāts otherwise known by the name of Gaṭwārās. They are mentioned by Elliott, as holding villages in Gohana, in Sonipat Bangar and in the Doāb on the opposite side of the Jumna (see Elliott, Races of the N. W. Provinces of India, Vol. I. page 126).

² 638 A.H. Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī. There is a confusion here in the dates.

Firishta says that the armies met on the 4th Rabi'ul Awwal 637 A.H., and that Razziyah and Altūniyah were put to death on the 25th of the same month. As Razziyah came to the throne in 634, 637 would seem to be the correct date but see Raverty, p. 648, note 2.

some, as for example Badru-d-Dīn Sangar Amīr Ḥājib¹ he sent to Badāon where they died in prison. Among them was Qāzī Jalālu-d-Dīn Kāshānī, whom they removed from his military command and appointed Qāzī of Badāon, and Qāzī Shamsu-d-Dīn the Qāzī of Mārḥira² they threw under the feet of an elephant in the same way.

And in the year 639 H. the troops of the Mughūl Changīz Khān came and invested the city of Lahore, and Malik Qarāqash the Governor of Lahore fled one day at midnight and came to Dehlī, where the Sultān pledged the Amīrs anew to fealty, and having summoned a conference sent Nizāmu-l-Mulk³ Wazīr, who at heart was not friendly to the Sultān, to oppose the Mughūl force in the Panjāb. He, with craft and hypocrisy wrote a letter to the Sultān and made many complaints of the Amīrs who were with him, and begged the Sultān to come. The Sultān, however, not thinking it advisable to go in person, wrote a despatch to him in apparent sincerity, saying, "those recalcitrant Amīrs shall meet their punishment in due time, you should treat them with civility⁴ till then." He shewed that despatch in original to the Amīrs and brought them over to his side, and the Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Bahrām Shāh sent Ḥazrat Shaikhu-l-Islām Khwāja-i-Khwājagān Quṭbu-d-Dīn Bakhtiyār Ūshī,⁵ may God sanctify him, to the Amīrs to put

SULTĀN ALĀU-D-DĪN MAS'ŪD SHĀH IBN RUKNU-D-DĪN FĪROZSHĀH

Having been released from prison by the consent of his uncles Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd and Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn, the sons of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Iyaltimish, became king at the end of the year already mentioned (639 H.), after that 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban³ (the elder) had occupied the throne for one day and had issued a proclamation. None of the Maliks or Amīrs had been satisfied with this arrangement and reverted to Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and appointed Malik Qutbu-d-Dīn Ḥasan as Deputy, and Malik Muhazzabu-d-Dīn Nizāmu-l-Mulk Wazīr of the kingdom, and in the year 640 H. the Amīrs of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn Mas'ūd put to death Nizāmu-l-Mulk the Wazīr.

permanently upon Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban, the elder, Budāon was conferred upon Malik Tāju-d-Dīn; and in this year 'Izz-ud-Dīn Tughā Khān who had advanced from Karrah¹ to the neighbourhood of Lakhnauti sent Sharfu-l-Mulk Asha'ri to the Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn with a written despatch, the Sultān then sent a red canopy and a special robe of honour in charge of the Governor of Oudh² for 'Izzu-d-Dīn Tughā Khān who was in Lakhnauti, and having brought both his uncles aforementioned out of confinement, assigned the district of Qanauj to Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn, and Bahrāij to Malik Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd, who acquitted themselves in those districts to his satisfaction. And in the year 642 H, the Mughūl forces³ arrived in the district of Lakhnauti, the assumption is that the Mughūls must have come by way of Tibet and Khitā, and Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn sent Tīmūr Khān Qarā Beg⁴ to the assistance of Tughā Khān and the Mughūls were defeated. Hostility arose between Tughā Khān and Malik Qirān,⁴ Tughā Khān came to Dehli, and Lakhnauti remained in the hands of Tīmūr Khān.⁴

¹ The printed text has آگرہ ! but MS. (A) has کترہ which is correct. Karrah is on the right bank of the Gauges Lat. 25° 41' N. Long. 81° 24' E. (see Hunter, Imp. Gaz.) Vol. VIII. Before Akbar's time Karrah was the seat of government.

² Qāzī Jalālu-d-Dīn Kāsānī (Tabaqāt-i-Nāṣiri).

³ This is an error which has according to Raverty been handed on from author to author. The way the mistake originated is pointed out by him in his note 8 on p. 665.

The original reading was کفار جاجنگر Kuffār-i Jājnagar which by some strange perversion became کفار حبکر خان thence to کفار چنگز خان and so to our author's statement.

Jājnagar or Jājpur on the Baitarānī river in Orissa, capital of the province under the Lion Dynasty, the Gajpati or Lords of Elephants (Āin-i-Akbarī II. 219 n. 1.) (see Imp. Gaz. Vol. VII., and Stat. Acc. of Bengal, XVIII. 85-89).

The کفار جاجنگر Infidel hordes of Jājnagar were of course Hindūs and not Mughūls, hence the assumption in the text to account for their presence before Lakhnauti is as unnecessary as it is absurd.

⁴ The real name of Tīmūr Khān Qarā Beg as he is called in the text, is Malik Qamaru-d-Dīn Qirān-i-Tīmūr Khān and he is the Malik Qirān referred to a line or two later. In other words Malik Qirān and "Tīmūr Khān" are one and the same person. In the text قیران is a misprint for قیران MS. (A). See also Raverty 663, n. 9.

In this year the Mughūl army¹ arrived in the vicinity of Uchh and assaulted it, and the Sultān proceeding by forced marches with all possible speed, reached the banks of the river Biāh, and the Mughūls raising the siege of Uchh took to flight; the Sultān on reaching Delhī took to arresting and putting to death to such an extent that the Amīrs and nobles turned against him, and agreed to summon Malik Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd ibn Shamsu-d-Dīn from Bahrāij, and upon his arrival at Delhī in the year 644 H, they threw Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn Mas'ūd into prison and he speedily² exchanged that confinement for the prison house of eternity.

SULTĀN NĀṢIRU-D-DĪN MAḤMŪD IBN SHAMSU-D-DĪN IYALTIMISH

Succeeded to the sovereignty in the year 644 H, (1246 A.D.) and the Wazīrship was conferred upon Ghiyāṣu-d-Dīn Balban the younger, who was in reality great, and was the slave and son-in-law of the father of Nāṣiru-d-dīn.³

At the time of his accession great largesse was given, and the poets recited many congratulatory odes from some of which the following verses are taken—

¹ 1244 A.D. This was really a Mughūl force, under the command of "the accursed Mungūtah" (Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī).

² On the 23rd of Muharram 644 H. (1246 A.D.).

³ Shamsu-d-Dīn Iyaltimish.

Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd son of Shamsu-d-Dīn Iyaltimish was born at the Qaṣr Bāgh in Delhi in the year 626 H. (Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī).

It will be remembered that he was the second son of Iyaltimish to bear the name of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn, which was given him upon the death of his elder brother (see p. 94) in 626 A. H. (see Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī, Cal. Text p. 201, l. 18.)

He was a man of quiet and retiring disposition and spent most of his leisure in making manuscript copies of the Qur'ān. Thomas (Pathān Kings) thinks that this faculty "possibly had its influence on the execution and finish of the legends of his coinage, which display a remarkable advance on the earlier mintages in the fineness of the lines and the improved definition of the Persian characters" (p. 125).

The Sultān entrusted all the affairs of the kingdom to Ghiyāṣu-d-Dīn Balban and in giving him the title of Ulugh Khān said, "I deliver into thy hands the reins of absolute authority, beware lest thou commit thyself to any evil action,³ for tomorrow thou wilt be at a loss in the presence of Almighty God and thou wilt bring shame upon me and upon thyself." The Sultān himself would generally retire into his chamber and occupy himself in devotion, and reading the Qur'ān and in repeating the sacred names of God may He be glorified and exalted; and it is currently reported that on the occasion of a public audience he used to clothe himself from head to foot in regal apparel, while in private he used to wear an old ragged garment; and they also say that he used to devote his time to the copy of the Qur'ān which he was writing,⁴

The Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī of Minhāju-s-Sirāj was written in his court and dedicated to him: hence its name.

² Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī of Minhāju-s-Sirāj is a general history up to 658 H. composed by Abū-Umar Minhāju-d-Dīn Uṣmāu ibn Sirāju-d-Dīn al Juzjānī. See Elliott II, 259. An English translation by Major Raverty has been published in the Bibliotheca Indica, by the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

further that he used to write it himself in private so that no one might recognize his handwriting and buy it for more than its fair value, and he used to sell (these) in the Bāzār. They relate also several other strange stories about him, which resemble the narratives regarding the rightly directed Khalifs – among them I have seen it written in a book that one day his wife was complaining of not having a servant, and she said “Whenever I bake bread for you my hands get burned and blistered.” He wept and replied, “The world is passing away, bear your toil for these few days for God Almighty on the morrow of resurrection (we trust in Him and believe in Him) as a reward for this labour, will surely give you a Hūrī to wait upon you, as it is, I cannot possibly buy a slave girl for you from the public funds. His wife too, agreed to this.

And the Sultān in the month of Rajab in the year of his accession, took an army towards Multān¹ and in Zūl Qa‘dah having crossed the river of Lahore (Rāwī) and having appointed Ulugh Khān as leader of the forces,² sent him towards the Jūd hills³ and the country round Nandanah, and he himself halted on the banks of the river Indus. Then in the year 648 H., he took an army towards Multān, and after some days Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban-i-Buzurg, the Governor of Nāgor, withdrew his foot from the circle of allegiance and rebelled,³ but when the Sultān proceeded thither, he begged for pardon and joined the Court.

Tieffenthaler, Vol. I, p. 211, Mēvāt est un canton assez étendu, borné par les provinces de Dehlī et d'Adjmere et par les Districts de Djepour et de Dik. It extends "north and south from Badshāpur to Harsana, 47 miles, and east and west from Dik to Narnol, 57 miles." Alwar is about the centre of it now.

Tieffenthaler goes on to say "Cette contrée est habitée par beaucoup de Mahométans qui étaient ci-devant gentils. Elle appartenait auparavant aux Afghans dans le temps qu'ils regnoient à Dehlī. Le Gouvernement passa ensuite aux Mogols. Maintenant le Djat (Jats) s'en est approprié la plus grande partie et une partie est tombée au pouvoir du Rājā de Djepour (Jaipūr) qui en a expulsé beaucoup d'habitans mahométans.

He speaks of the abundance of Nīm (Melia azadirachta) and Sissoo (Dalbergia sissoo) trees, and praises the cattle and horses of the country.

He speaks of Narnol the capital city of the district, as having formerly been populous and flourishing. See also Rennell's Memoir (1788), p. 75.

³ Tabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī says this occurred in 649 H., which is more probably correct, as it is the account of a cotemporary historian.

country with five thousand cavalry and 200,000 infantry came out to meet him and gave battle to the Sultān in great force, but was defeated and the fort of Narwar¹ was taken. And in this year Sher Khān Governor of Multān, and Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban who had left Nāgōr with reinforcements for him reduced the fortress of Uchh, and Sher Khān remained in the fortress, while Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Balban came to pay his respects to the king, and received from him as a jāegīr the districts of Budāon and was given¹ the title of Kashlū Khān.

And in the year 650 H. (1252 A.D.) he left Dehlī intending to proceed to Lahore, and from there he went to Multān and Uchh, and in this expedition Kashlū Khān accompanied the Sultān as far as the river Biāh.

And in the year 651 H. marching from Dehlī, he detailed forces to act against Tabarhindah and Uchh and Multān of which Sher Khān had lost control, and of which the Sindhis held possession; and having regained possession of them, handed them over to the charge of Arsalān Khān and returned. And in the year 652 H. having assembled an army on the confines of the country at the foot of the hills² of Bijnor, and having crossed the Ganges by ¹ Narwar.—In the Āin-i-Akbarī, we find the Sarkar of Narwar as having 500 Cavalry, 20,000 Infantry. Narwar itself had a stone fort (see also Raverty 690, note 1).

Narwar. Tieff. I. 175 gives a sketch plan of the fortress of Narwar and a long description from which the following note is abridged.

A town of moderate size about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile long and ten in breadth, protected in his time (about 1780 A.D.) with stone walls, but formerly unprotected. Latitude $25^{\circ} 30'$ N. Longitude taken from the Islands of the Blest $93^{\circ} 24'$. (Cf. Āin-i-Akbarī [Jarrett] III. 60.) Houses well and substantially built with flat roofs.

It has four gates, and there was a Christian family of Armenian stock who had built a palace, and a chapel where a Jesuit father said mass. The fortress was built upon a mountain having two peaks or spurs running parallel North and South.

He considers it must have been impregnable in old times before the invention of gunpowder "pour le malheur du genre humain et la ruine des villes."

A good supply of water is furnished by a large tank paved and flanked with stone. He also speaks of a magnetic iron ore from which they procure iron by smelting for export in various forms, and a flint of a whitish colour and marvellous hardness used for flint locks.

² Of Bardār and Bijnor (Tubaqāt-i-Nāṣirī). In the text instead of

And after some time news arrived that certain of the Amīrs, namely Ulugh Khān-i-A'zam, and Arsalān Khān and others, in concert with Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn, the brother of the Sultān, had commenced hostilities in the vicinity of Tabarhindah. The Sultān thereupon marched from Dehlī, and in the neighbourhood of Tabarhindah and Kuhrām and Kaithal,⁵ by the intervention of a party of Amīrs, the Amīrs agreed to peace, and with many protestations and oaths suing for pardon came into submission to the Sultān; and the Sultān conferred upon Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn the Governorship of Lahore, and proceeded to the capital. And in the year 653 H. the feelings of the Sultān underwent a change with respect to his mother Maḥika-i-Jahān. He gave Qutlugh Khān, to whom Malika-i-Jahān was married, a jāegīr in Oudh,⁶ and a short time after turning against him also⁷ sent him to Bahrāij. He took fright at this and came to the hill country of Sir Mūr, and Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān and certain other Amīrs made common cause with him and laid the foundation of revolt; the Sultān accordingly detailed Ulugh Khān Balban with a large army¹ to oppose them, and when the two forces had arrived within a short distance of each other the Shaikhul-Islām Saiyyid Qutbu-d-Dīn and Qāzī Shamsu-d-Dīn of Bharāij and another party of men incited Qutlugh Khān to come into Dehlī, and inspired him with a desire to possess that country;² the inhabitants of Dehlī joined in this instigation. Ulugh Khān represented this at the Sultān's court, and the Sultān issued an order for every individual of that party to go separately to his own place, and Qutlugh Khān and Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān after this defeat, traversed the distance of a hundred *krohs*³ in two days and came from Sāmāna to Dehlī, but did not find the party which had been the cause of their being summoned. Qutlugh Khān and Kashlū Khān also were separated, and Ulugh Khān following them arrived in the Sultān's presence.⁴ And in the year 655 H. the Sultān issued an order for the expulsion of certain nobles and grandees from the city of Dehlī, and at the end of this year the Mughūls arrived on the boundaries of Uchh and Multān; Kashlū Khān Balban made common cause with them and the Sultān came up in hot haste against them. The Mughūls were not able to stand against him and turned back towards Khurāsān. The Sultān also raised the banner of return towards the capital and having bestowed a robe of honour upon Malik Jalālu-d-Dīn Jānī marched towards Lakhnautī.⁵ And in the year 656 H. The ancient Krosa of Magadh was about 1½ miles, the kos of the Gangetic provinces was rather more than 2½ miles. The Akbarī kos was rather less than 1½ miles and this is the standard referred to above.

⁴ These Maliks (Qutlugh Khān and 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān) retired towards the Siwālik territory foiled in their object (Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī).

⁵ Compare the account in Ṭabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī according to which these events took place in the year 656 H. not in 655 H.

And in the year 657 H. elephants and great treasure and jewels and cloths without number, arrived from Lakbnautī as presents, and in Rajab of this year Malik 'Izzu-d-Dīn Kashlū Khān Balban earning relief from the turmoil of this transitory world, hastened to the next world, and in this year Ghausu-l-'Ālam Ḥaẓrat Shaikh Bahāu-d-Dīn Zakariyā² the Multānī, may God sanctify him, raised the tent of³ close union with God Almighty, and a celebrated poet wrote this couplet to record the date:

Multān in the reign of Shihābu-d-Dīn Ghūrī. He was one of the numerous disciples of Bahāu-d-Dīn Zakariyā, and died two years later than his master, according to Firishta (see also Āin-i-Akbarī [Jarrett] III. p. 363).

His tomb is mentioned in the Āin-i-Akbarī (I. 325) as being at Ajūdhan (Pāk Patan or Patan-i-Panjāb).

There is, as will be seen, considerable discrepancy in the dates, Badāonī gives 656 H. as the date of Farīdu-d-Dīn Ganj-i-shakar's death and 657 H. as that of the death of Bahāu-d-Dīn Zakariyā, while according to Firishta the latter should be 666 H. and the former 668 H. The Āin-i-Akbarī gives 668 H. as the date of the death of Farīdu-d-dīn Ganj-i-shakar and 665 H. as the date of the death of Bahāu-d-dīn Zakariyā.

² Shaikh Bahāu-d-Dīn Zakariyā was a famous Muhammadan saint of Multān. He was the grandson of Kamālu-d-Dīn 'Alī Shāh Qureishī who left Mecca for Khwārazm and thence came to Multān, the Qubbatu-l-Islām, and resided there, and became acknowledged by the people as their teacher and guide. Shaikh Bahāu-d-Dīn was the son of Shaikh Wajihu-d-Dīn by the daughter of Ḥusām-d-Dīn Tarmadī and was born in the fort of Kot Karor in 587 H. He died at Delhī about the year 666 H.; while engaged in devotion in his chamber an angel bearing a sealed missive having appeared to his son Ṣadru-d-Dīn 'Ārif with a command to give the missive to Bahāu-d-Dīn. He did so and retired, but returned on hearing voices in the room saying دوست بدوست رسید. "The friend has joined the friend" when he found his father lying dead.

This account is abridged from Firishta. The account of the saint given by Beale differs from this but the source of the information given there is not stated. See also Āin-i-Akbarī (Jarrett) III. 362 and note.

The tomb of Bahāu-d-Dīn Zakariyā is in Multān.

Come and cast one thoughtful look upon this dust.
For it is the dust of the resting-place of trusted kings.

And of the number of those who sounded the drum of poetry and attained the rank of Maliku-l-Kalām (Lord of Eloquence) during Nāṣiru-d-Dīn's reign, one was Shamsu-d-Dīn Dabīr³ whose manifest excellencies and perfection are beyond description and need no narration and praise, and Mīr Khusrū,⁴ may God sanctify him, who tested the genuineness of his own poems by the touchstone of their acceptability to that other (Shamsu-d-Dīn) used to boast of them, and in the preface to the Ghurratu-l-Kamāl and at the end of the Hasht Bihisht greatly embellished his words in the mention of the praiseworthy qualities and in spreading

For a full account of the province of Mīwāt see Hunter, Imp. Gaz., Vol. IX. It includes the British districts of Muttra and Gurgāon, part of Ulwar and Bhartpur. See also page 129, note 2, of this Volume.

² On the 11th Jamādīu-l-Awwal; as he came to the throne on the 23rd Muharram 644 H. his reign was twenty years three months and some days, not as stated in the text. He left no issue, his only son by the daughter of Ulugh Khān having died in infancy.

³ There is no mention of this poet in either the Majma'u-l-Fuṣahā or the Ātashkada. There are some highly laudatory verses at the end of the Hasht Bihisht in praise of one Abū Ḥanīfah, possibly referring to Shamsu-d-dīn.

The date assigned for his birth seems unlikely as he would only have been thirteen when Nāṣiru-d-Dīn died. The Majma'ul Fuṣahā gives no date for his birth but says his father came to Dehlī from Turkistān in the time of Changīz Khān's invasion, and obtained great distinction in the court of Sultān Maḥmūd ibn Tughlaq Shāh and was killed in a rebellion of the infidels, when his son Amīr Khusrū was appointed as his successor in his Amīrship, which he eventually gave up and acquired great skill and distinction as a poet. He died in 725 H. and was buried in the tomb of Shaikh Shakarganj (Farīdu-d-Dīn Ganjshakar see note 1, page 133).

He was the author the celebrated Qirānu-s-Sa'dain the poem which was written to commemorate the meeting of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn with his son Sultān Kai Qubād on the banks of the Ghāgra, and of several other works (see Elliott, III. pp. 523 and seqq).

¹ MS. (A) reads correctly سلطان ناصر الدين Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Bughrā Khān second son of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban. He was placed in charge of Bengal after the revolt and defeat of its governor Tughral.

He married a daughter of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd Shāh by whom he had a son and successor Kai-Qubād. (See Raverty, Tabaqāt-i-Nāṣirī 716 n.).

In Thomas, Pathan Kings of Dehlī there is given a copy of an inscription of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd which was engraved over the doorway of the minaret at Aligarh bearing the date 10th Rajab A.H. 652, and the author mentions in rather too mild terms the wanton Vandalism which allowed a record of this kind to be destroyed in 1861.

Thomas advances the opinion that the original design for this inscription both in matter and form was the work of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn himself. (cf. Thomas op. cit 129-130).

'He who pares his nails and trims his beard every Friday saying, "In the name of God and in accordance with the ordinance of the prophet of God," every paring shall be counted to him as the manumission of a slave of the sons of Isma'il.'

Special rules are laid down for cutting the nails. They must be cut on Friday, and Muḥammad said, He who cuts his nails in alternate order will never be afflicted with blear eyes. It is also said in a Ḥadīṣ by Ḥamīd ibn 'Abdu-r-Rahmān.

من قص اظفاره يوم الجمعة دخل فيه شفاء وخرج منه داء

"He who pares his nails on Friday is filled with health and sickness leaves him." The preferable time for paring the nails is Thursday after the evening prayer. In the case of the right hand one should commence from the little finger, proceeding to the middle finger and thence to the thumb, thence to the ring finger and lastly to the forefinger. The order in the left hand is (1) Thumb (2) middle finger (3) little finger (4) forefinger (5) ring-finger.

⁴ In Persia it is the custom to bury the parings of the nails, and the cuttings of the hair, lest some harm should happen to the owner should they fall into the possession of a malicious person with magical power. The butchers also make a hole or a cut in the blade bones of sheep for the same reason, as they are considered a powerful instrument of magic. In the list of charms given in Gaster's translation of the "Sword of Moses" we find "69, to send plagues, take (parings?) from seven men and put them into a new potsherd and go out to the cemetery and there say No. 69 and bury it in a place that is not trodden by horses and afterwards take the dust from this potsherd and blow it into his face or upon the lintel of his house" J.R.A.S., Jan. 1896, p. 185.

² روح Rūḥ is the vital principle the "breath of life" (Gen. ii. 7) as distinguished from the نفس nafs or conscious manifestation of life, or the consciousness itself. Thus we find in the Qur'ān XV. 29.

وَنَفَخْتُ فِيْهِ مِنْ رُّوْحِيْ wa nafakhtu fihi min rūḥi, "and breathed into it of my spirit;" and again in Qur'ān V. 116.

إِنْ كُنْتُ قُلْتُ فَقَدْ عَلِمْتُمْ تَعْلَمُ مَا فِيْ نَفْسِيْ

In kunto qultuhu faqad 'alimtahū ta'lamu mā fī nafsī.

"Had I said so verily thou wouldst have known it, thou knowest what is in my soul"

It is said in a tradition that God created Adam and put into him a نفس nafs and a روح rūḥ.

It would seem as though the word نفس nafs connotes the same idea as the word mind, using this word in the sense of the phenomena produced by

By thy order three daughters have come forth from the soul ¹
Without the pangs of childbirth, and without the intermediary influence of a husband.

Compared with thy ancient order what is Kisrā ² and what is Qaiṣar

In face of thy decree what is the Khāqān and what is Halākū ?
Without thy command no ant can draw a single breath of its own will,

Without thy knowledge no sleeper turns from one side to the other.

the action of the روح rūḥ or vital principle upon matter: the highest form of matter, with which we are familiar, namely, the nerve structures of the human brain, admits of certain phenomena which in their totality we call mind: the existence of a higher form of matter capable of higher manifestation than those which come within our present experience is obviously possible. A force apart from matter may, for anything we know, exist in a way that we cannot figure to ourselves for want of some example. Such a force self-existent would be روح Rūḥ.

¹ These three daughters here referred to are the three divisions of نفس nafs. نفس nafs, is by Arabian metaphysicians divided primarily into two divisions (a) نفس لعقل nafsu-l-'aql which is also called النفس الناطقة annafsu-n-nāṭiqah the reason, mind, or discriminating faculty and (b) نفس الحياة nafsu-l-ḥaiyāt the breath of life.

The first of these is again sub-divided into two, that which commands and that which forbids: thus they say فلان يواصر نفسه fulānun yu'āmiru nafsaihi. Such an one consults his two minds, i.e., weighs the pros and cons.

See Lane article نفس and روح, also Ghiyāṣu-l-lughāt, and Kashshāf art. نفس.

² كسرى The Chosroes. قيسر Qaiṣar Cæsar; an Emperor.

خاقان A Turkish word meaning Emperor. The name given to the Emperor of China and potentates of Chinese Tartary. (See de Courteille Turk. Orient. Dict. خاقان). Khāqān. Originally the title Qān was given to the supreme sovereign of the Moguls, while the subordinate princes of the Chaghatai and other Chingizid lines were styled only Khān.

After a time the higher Qān lost its peculiar distinctive dignity and was used by many besides the sovereign (see Tārīkh-i-Rashīdī (Elias and Ross), p. 30 n. 1).

¹ The word چنگ chang in its original sense means bent or curved, hence it means a hook, and especially the hook called also "gajak گجک" with which elephants are driven. Another secondary meaning is the bent hand and fingers of man, or the claws of animals and talons of birds. Also the name of a musical instrument (Burhān-i-Qāṭi). The چنگ was played with a plectrum called زخمه Zakhma, and from its description as گوز Kūz and سرنگون sarnigūn was like the عود 'ūd of the Arabs, and very similar to the mandolin of our times.

In the Baḥr-i-Jawāhir it is stated that there are two kinds of Sumbul—Sumbul-i-Hindī, and Sumbul-i-Rūmī.

It is laxative and a tonic to the brain.....useful in dropsy, in flatulence and as a hæmostatic in metrorrhagia.

The perfumed sumbul is the variety called Sumbul-i-Hindī while the Sumbul-i-Rūmī is also called Nardīn.

عالم الجن 'ālamu-l-jinn, the world of the jinn or genii.
عالم الملائكة 'ālamu-l-malā'ikah, the world of angels.
عالم الحيوان 'ālamu-l-haywān, the animal world.
عالم النبات 'ālamu-n-nabāt, the vegetable world.
عالم المعدن 'ālamu-l-ma'ādīn, the mineral world.

The five stated times of prayer are known as—

فجر fajr and عشاء 'ashā maghrib مغرب 'aṣr عصر zuhr ظهر

The two standards علم 'alam are the sun and moon, cf. Qur'ān, XXXVI.,

³ M. S. (A) reads جزعش. His onyx-like eye, &c.

This must be taken to refer to a saying of the prophet Muhammad "The cornelian for me and the onyx for my enemies." According to the Nukhbatu-d-dahr (p. 69), he said this "because the onyx causes its wearer to become ill-tempered, rash, precipitate, and litigious.....There are several varieties of onyx.....the best is that in which the markings are of equal breadth.....
The whiteness of the onyx increases as the moon waxes, and diminishes as it wanes. The onyx softens when boiled in oil, sparkling and emitting light.....
The people of China (صين) where the onyx is found, will not approach the mines on account of the unluckiness of the stone, so that only the poorest class will work there.

One property possessed by the onyx is that of curing scald-head in children:
it also acts as a sialagogue causing them to dribble when it is hung round their necks."

See also Lane Art. جزع where it is stated that the wearing of an onyx in a signet induces anxiety, disquietude of mind, grief and terrifying dreams

It relieves dimness of vision and is a stomachic tonic, is a laxative and expectorant. Sadidī further says that honey is beneficial to old men, but injurious to youths and people of hot temperament, is aphrodisiac when heated with pulp of roses, and cures the bites of snakes and of dogs. Neither book mentions its use in the treatment of tremors specifically, but Sadidī's statement that it is good for old men may refer to senile tremors.

Oh thou from awe of whose order the heaven is bowed in submission, the proclamation of thy might is this, Thou standest alone thou hast no companion.

Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, thy dominion is the dominion of uprightness.

Thy empire is no changeable empire. Thy rule is not a divided rule.

The rays of the brightness of thy holiness are the portrayers of the sun and moon. The recluse of thy kingdom is in the highest altitude of Simāk reaching even to Samak.²

At one time thou givest to the partridge of the day wings and feathers of fiery hue, at another in the liquid cage of the heavens thou makest the moon-tailed pigeon of the night³ as an angel.⁴

Thou hast broken the cup of the moon at the head and foot of each month.⁵ Thou hast bound thine all-encompassing contemplation around the star Parak.⁶

There are two Simāks one As-Simāku-r-Rāmiḥ, the lance-bearing Simāk (Arcturus); and the other As-Simāku-l-A'zal, the unarmed Simāk (Spica Virginis.) Both of these are in the feet of the constellation Leo. The word Simāk is said by the Arab commentator on Ulug Beg to denote great altitude, in derivation from the root Samaka to rise, to be exalted. See Ibn Khalliqān (de Slane) Vol. I. note 11.

In the Nāsikh-u-t-tawārikh of Lisānu-l-Mulk we find the following account of this incident:—

“The cause of the death of Nimrod was this, that after despairing of his ability to burn Abraham, in consequence of his protection by the Almighty, the idea of entering into conflict with the Most High entered his head, and

If the drops of the bounty of thy nearness distil upon the palate of my heart say to the clouds of supplication "Do not rain" and say to the tear of hope "Do not fall."

I am fulfilled with thy bounty like a pearl in the cloudy weather.¹

I have attained the dignity of eloquence from thy consent. By thy help it is that this joyful sound³ has been placed in my hand by destiny.

How long shall I utter cries of grief round the carpets of Emperors, because at thy door there is a sustenance-gaining world free from vexation.⁴

he ordered Abraham to be brought before him; then turning towards him he said, Oh Abraham, bid your God to come with his army, and array himself against me in battle so that the one who conquers may have the upper hand. Tomorrow, that is Wednesday, we will arrange the battle field before this city, and test man with man.

Then having reviewed his army he came out from the city with a countless array, and drew up in line on the battle field.

The prophet Abraham came out alone and unaccompanied, in face of that vast host, and stood there. Suddenly, by the command of the Almighty, the face of heaven became darkened by a cloud of mosquitos, which are the most contemptible of all creatures, and they at once began to sting the army of Nīmrūd, and put them to flight, and most of those worthless ones died. Nīmrūd, on seeing this, in fear and shame turned his back upon the whirlpool of death, and fled into his fort. Suddenly a single mosquito entering after him stung his lip, and reached his brain. For forty years the mosquito fed upon his brain, after which Nīmrūd died in abject misery."

As the mosquito is known to be the intermediary host of certain parasites and may be the means of conveying infective disease, there may be a substratum of truth in this fable.

After the prophet's death Abū Bakr took it and Fāṭima demanded it of him, he replied : " Thy father said that we who are prophets do not leave hereditary legacies, all that I leave is for Moslems.

نحن معاشر الأنبياء لا نورث ما تركنا ها صدقة

The Shī'ahs say that Abu Bakr seized Faddak by force. The poet denies this assertion in the above verse.

¹ يوم شوم. The ill-omen attending the owl is common to all countries, probably from the habit it has of frequenting ruined buildings. The Arabic proverb indicates the estimation in which the owl was held.

لو كان في البومة خير ما تركها الصياد

Si in ulula bonum fuisset, eam venator non reliquisset. Freytag Meid. Prov. II. p. 572.

The story told by Mas'ūdī about Bahrām points in the same direction. See Ibn Khaldūn (de Slane). Prolegomenes, I. 107.

In the Haiātu-l-Haiat there is a story told of Al Mā'mūn who in the course of his peregrinations one day saw a young man writing something on the wall with a piece of charcoal. He ordered his servants to see what the man was writing and it was as follows :

يا قصر قد جمع فيك الشوم واللوم متي يعشش في اركانك اليوم
يوم يعشش فيك اليوم من فرحي اكون اول من نعيك مرغوم

Oh palace ill-luck and curse are assembled in thee ;
When will the owl make her nest in thy pillars ?
Happy the day when the owl builds her nest in thee !
I shall be the first to announce thy downfall.

He explained this before Al Mā'mūn by saying that he was in great distress and hoped to benefit by the ruin of the palace.

² The name Khārijī was given to any one who denied any one of the true Imāms (see Cureton's Shahrastānī Milal wa Nihal, page 85.)

See the article Khawārij in Hughes, Dict. of Islām.

The Khārijī heresy was that any man of no matter what nation or tribe may be appointed Khalīfah provided that he was a good man and was elected by the whole body of Moslems.

See for a fuller account of this sect. Sale's Qur'ān. Preliminary Discourse, p. 123 (Ed. of 1857) (Badger. Indians and Seiyids of Omān, Appendix, pp. 374, and seq.) (Osborn, Islām under the Arabs, p. 116). The last mentioned gives a full account of the origin of this heretical sect when 'Alī and Mū'āwīa met at Siffin from which the following is an extract " The valour of 'Alī was brilliantly seconded by that of his favourite lieutenant Malika-l-Ashtar, the Marshal Ney of the Arabian Army. A tremendous charge by Malik at last forced a wing of the Syrian troops to give ground. Gradually the whole line was forced back, the retreat became a rout."

However at this critical moment Amron ibn al-'Ās knowing the fanatical character of 'Alī's troops, ordered a number of Syrian soldiers to advance

'Alī's soldiers thereupon turned upon him headed by certain men whom Ash-Shahrastānī names, and insisted upon 'Alī recalling Malik Al-Ashtar from fighting against the Moslems "or" said they "we will assuredly deal with you as we dealt with 'Uṣmān" and insisted upon the matter in dispute between 'Alī and Mu'āwīa being settled by arbitration.

¹ The above shews that 'Amīd Lūmakī was born in the year 601 H. The mode of reckoning is that always adopted. There does not appear to be any intended double entendre here; though the word ند which stands for 54 means good guidance, no meaning can be attached to the خند which stands for 655. See page 99 note 4.

appears to mean that when he is at the point of death he finds mercy. The intoxication is the unconsciousness resulting from approaching death, and the retraction of the chin and lower jaw in the death struggle is believed to be the effects of the wineskin.

Oh thou upon whose jasmine-like face are the countless toils of the violet-hued locks.
 By whose ruby lips the brilliant pearls are imprisoned.
 Thy locks are an armourer who every moment brings forth
 Fragrant chains to fetter thy lily-like face.
 Thy lily face is better confined by the links of thy spikenard-hued locks.
 Bid the morning breeze as it breathes not to remove the chains (of thy hair) from thy rosy (cheeks).
 Thy mouth is like a delicate bud which bursts into smiles;
 Loosen the folds of that bud even if with the point of a thorn.
 Thy rose-petalled cheeks are adorned by the bonds of thy dark and fragrant locks.

¹ This appears to be the author's meaning. The convulsive breathing is compared to the jerking action of the balista.

² If we read كرك for كرك the meaning will be "strikes it with the elephant goad." There is some uncertainty about the meaning of the word كرك. One meaning is according to the Burhān-i-Qāṭi "an earthenware vessel which is used for holding dates."

³ قُتُقْ كُرْ should be the reading. MS. (A) MS. (B) read فَتْكَ كُرْ.

قُتُقْ (qutuq) is a Turkish word signifying any thing eaten as a relish.

كُرْ (gazak) is the Persian equivalent of قُتُقْ. (qutuq).

In small doses it is beneficial acting as a soporific, in large doses it kills.

No mention is made of its quarrel-provoking properties, and from the second-half of the couplet it would seem as though the quarrels are provoked by its cultivation rather than by the drug.

¹ As regards the word كُوف kuṣūf it is generally held that this word is more specially applicable to an eclipse of the sun while خُوف khūṣūf is applied to denote an eclipse of the moon. The Ghiyāṭu-l-Liḡhāt applies it to either : while the Kashshāfi Iṭṭilāḥāt-i-Funūn lays down that كُوف should be used to denote a total eclipse, and خُوف a partial eclipse ; كُوف moreover indicating only a change of colour, while خُوف denotes a total loss of colour. Lane however says they both mean the same, or that "in the common conventional language الكُوف is the partial loss of the light of the sun, and الخُوف is the total loss of the light thereof," and it is said in a tradition.

ان الشمس والقمر لا يخفان لموت احد او لحياته

As ك is a much earlier letter than خ it is probable that originally at all events كُوف stood for an eclipse either of the sun or moon, the meaning being subsequently modified for convenience.

² Compare the Hindū mythological monster Rāhu.

The name Rāhu by which the ascending node is designated is properly mythological and belongs to the monster in the heavens which, by the ancient Hindūs, as by more than one other people, was believed to occasion the eclipses of the sun and moon by attempting to devour them. Burgess, Sūrya Sidhānta, p. 50.

Mythologically Rāhu is a Daitya who is supposed to seize the sun and moon and swallow them thus obscuring their rays and causing eclipses. Rāhu and Ketu are in astronomy the ascending and descending nodes. Rāhu is the cause of eclipses and is used to designate the eclipse itself. (Dowson Dict. of Hindu Mythology, p. 252.)

QASĪDA.

My eye is the boundless ocean, the thought of my heart is a bark,

In sorrow my bark sets forth on the floods as they flow from my eyes.

Night and day I float in the flood of tears, how can my bark 114 live in the midst of the raging billows of blood?

How can I expect to win my desire from the vile world?

How can I launch my bark on the surface of a gutter?

Although my bark in this ocean, now sails on and now lies at rest, sailing with the seven sails,² and resting on the four anchors.³

The text as it stands must be translated, If thou hadst girt would have been brought &c.

It is evident from this Qasīda that 'Amīd Lomakī was imprisoned, but I can find no reference to it in the account of him given in the Majma'u-l-Fuṣṣḥā.

² The seven sails here appear to mean the seven members of the body, known as the هفت اندام haft andām (1) the head, (2) the chest, (3) the back, (5) and (6) the two hands, (7) the feet or (1) the brain, (2) the heart, (3) the liver, (4) the spleen, (5) lungs, (6) gall bladder, (7) stomach.

This name was also given to a vein by section of which it was supposed that blood was withdrawn from the seven members first mentioned.

³ The four anchors are the four "humours," according to the old humoral pathology. الدم ad-dam. The blood. البلغم al-balgham. The phlegm. الصفراء as-safrā'. The bile. السوداء as-saudā'. The black bile.

The four anchors may however be taken to be the four elements, earth, air, fire, and water.

Of what use to me are those sails and those anchors,
If my bark is suddenly overwhelmed by the billows of death?

In this age I sought fidelity from the tyrannical,
Who has ever seen a boat on the Jihūn in the month of Mehrgān¹

In front of the claws of this crab² and the revolution of the nine heavens, loosen³ thy four anchors and then launch thy bark.

The sea-monster of avarice of my soul turns back, otherwise⁴ one might drag the boat to the shore by some contrivance.
With the exception of the philosophers how can anyone

1. "In former times (says Albirūnī) this day (Mihrajān) used to coincide with the beginning of winter" at which time the Jihūn would be frozen and unfit for navigation owing to the intense cold. Yāqūt states that in the winter the Jihūn freezes so hard that the ice is five spans (about 40 inches) thick; that the people dig wells through the ice with pick-axes to get water, and that caravans and carts cross the ice, which become like a high road covered with dust. This continues two months. Concerning the word Mihrgān, the Burhān-i-Qāṭi says, "Mibrgān is the seventh month of the Shamsī year, which corresponds with the position of the sun in Libra, which is the beginning of autumn. The feast of Mihrgān is the next greatest feast among the Persians to that of Nauroz, and, like this latter feast, is divided into two, Mihrgān-i-khaṣṣa and Mihrgān-i-āmma; the feast of Mihrgān lasts for six days beginning from the sixteenth of the month. It is said that God Almighty laid out the world on the 21st and endowed bodies with souls on that day. They say also that Farīdūn ascended the throne on that day. The meaning of Mihrgān is the binding of affection (محبت پیوستن) and it was so called because for the above reasons the people were treated kindly by their rulers on that day.

Others again say that there was a king of the Persians named Mihr who was a great tyrant and was consigned to hell in the middle of this month, so that they called it Mihrgān in the meaning of death of a tyrannical king. (Burhān-i-Qāṭi).

According to others Mihr is the name of the sun, who is said to have for the first time appeared to the world on this day. This is indicated by the custom of the Kisrās of crowning themselves on this day with a crown on which was worked an image of the sun and of the wheel on which he rotates.—(Albirūnī).

² He compares the world to ebony because of its blackness indicating misfortune. Ebony أبنوس is said in the Burhān-i-Qāṭi to be "a black wood which when placed upon the fire emits a pleasant smell like the عود ('ūd) or aloes, when rubbed down with water and used as a collyrium it relieves night blindness, given internally it dispels calculus of the bladder."

The Baḥrū-l-Jawāhir says that ebony "is a black wood which sinks when thrown into water," hence the poet assumes a ship built of ebony would sink.

³ Abul Hārīṣ Sinjar Ibn Malakshah ibn Alp Arslān was Sultān of Khurāsān, Ghazna and Māwarān-n-Nahr. He was the sixth of the Seljūq Sultāns.

He was excessively liberal, and was supposed to be wealthier than any of the Persian kings. He was defeated and taken prisoner by the Ghuzz tribe in 548 A. H. (1153 A.D.) but eventually escaped and was at the time of his death in 555 A.H. on the point of recovering his throne. He was born according to Ibn Khalliqān in A. H. 479, in the environs of Sinjār whence he received his name. One authority places his death in the year 552. He died at Merv. See Ibn Khalliqān (de Siane) I. 600.

⁴ Qairawān, Long. 10° E. Lat. 36 N. is situated in the North of Africa, in the province of Tunis. It is the ancient Cyrene, the modern Kairwān. At the commencement of the Musulman occupation it was the capital of Africa. See Abul Feda (Renaud) II. i. 198. The ocean of Qairawān is the Mediterranean.

In Abul Feda (Annales), we find that Qairawān was founded in the year 50 H. (665-666 A.D.) and was completed five years later.

from every dry stick the branch of saffron.¹

When his auspicious prow turns towards the ocean the ship looks like a pearl emerging from the sea.

The heaven offers itself as his ladder when, arriving near the

At that time when his ship floats over the crimson tide of the blood of his brave enemies,

If we look, it appears as though his ship crosses over the dry (sparkling) water of the points of daggers and spears.

Thy enemy saw his life like a snare (from which he must

Happy art thou! at the sight of whose maddening glances

The eye of the narcissus is embarrassed by thy glances.

The stag is harassed by envy of those muskladen locks.

From envy of the musk-coloured spot³ which stands like a drop of dew upon thy rose-like cheek, the stag without respite nurses a lacerated heart in his breast.

Western Gulf of the Red Sea, through which the Israelites passed on dry the site of the ancient town of Clysm. Epiphanius mentions τὸ κλύσμαρον τοῦ κλύσματος as one of the three ports of the Red Sea, the others being Elath and Berenice.

There was in ancient times a fork or arm of the sea of which the "Bitter

Red Sea at Clysm.

³ Cf. يا حياتي حين يرضى و مماتي حين يسخط
آه من ورد على خديك بالمسك منقط

Thou my life art when thou smilest
But my death when thou art angered.
Ah! thy cheek like summer roses
With the grains of musk be sprinkled!

Needs must that with those two love fascinated eyes,
The stag should endeavour to protect himself from the snares of thy locks.

When the story of thy fragrant tresses reached him,
The stag curtailed his narration of the bag of musk.
The stag suffered from the effects of the intoxication of thine eyes,

And he got rid of his headache by drinking of the cup of the assembly of the world-subduer.

The auspicious lion, protector of the crown of true religion,
Sinjar,

In whose estimation the fierce lion of the sky is but a stag.

The stag thought right to carry a fragrant ball of camphor¹ taken from the dust of his threshold, to Khitā as a memorial.
Perhaps it was from the dust of his dignity which became² the ornament of the sun, that the stag obtained superiority over the wild beasts by reason of his musk-bag.

Happy art thou star-arrowed one, whom the demon-hearted fear and shun as³ the stag avoids the lion.

An enemy who falls into thy clutches does not escape ;

Who has ever known the stag to escape from the claws of the lion?

At that time the stag prided himself upon being fleetier than thy charger, now in sooth the stag is ashamed of his slow-footedness.

At the time of attack, how can the stag in spite of all his efforts, reach the dust which is thrown up by thy charger's hoofs?

Think it not strange if from the abundance of his bounty, the lynx goes slowly on foot, and the stag swiftly like a horse man.

'Twixt thine eyelids reigns a Sultān,
Helpless, lo ! I bow before him.

This comparison of the mole on a cheek to grains of musk is one of the commonest similes among Persian poets.

Compared with the fragrance of thy goodness how can the stag boast¹ of the dried blood of his navel in Tātār.

By the aid of thy words which are like an antidote, I have no fear, even though the stag shall become like to one that feeds on snakes.²

His food is the snake, but afterwards like the elk, besides the antidote, the stag offers in every direction the bag of musk.

In the land in which thou art, by reason of thy great justice the lynx sits sorrowful, and the stag stands to comfort him.

The day that thou pursuest him he shews only his right shoulder when the stag rushes from the right to the left of thy army.

In reliance upon thee if a stag were to cherish a young lion in its bosom it would be no wonder.

What power have two hundred enemies against thy prowess?

What does the hunting leopard think of a head of a thousand stags?

Thy enemy will be able to engage in conflict with thee.

At that time when the stag's horns are capable of fighting the lion.

² The elk is said to feed on snakes and the water which collects at the corners of the eye (inner canthus) is reputed an antidote for all poisons. (Burhān-i-Qāfi).

The following is abridged from the Haiātū-l-Haiwān. "The stag is fond of snakes which it eats wherever it can find them, commencing from the tail of the snake. Sometimes the stag gets bitten by the snake in which case its tears flow down, and fill two hollows beneath its eyes large enough to contain the finger, here they congeal and become solid like wax. This wax is used as an antidote against the poison of snakes and scorpions, and when given by the mouth is useful as a remedy for other poisons. The stag also eats crabs, and hunts for fish by walking along the margin of the lake or river, when the fish come out of curiosity to see it, this fact is made use of by fishermen who are wont to dress in the skin of the stag.

The horns of the stag, which are shed yearly, are of great service to mankind, more especially as a remedy for impotence, and to facilitate parturition. If a portion is burned and administered mixed with honey it acts as a vermifuge, and when used as a dentifrice removes discoloration of the teeth. Used for fumigation it drives away reptiles and other venomous animals. If a portion is hung round the neck, the wearer will not sleep so long as it remains there. A draught of the stag's blood dissolves stone in the bladder."

119. In the meadow of thy favour the stag has never seen his quarters and sides as thin as his legs.
 Conqueror of the world, I have bound "The stag"¹ with thirty-three couplets in thy praise by way of experiment as though it were a camel.
 It is fitting that the word "musk deer" should be repeated as radif a hundred times since thou hast sent me in thy kindness a stag twice.
 Formerly the stag thought of nothing but the musk-bag, now he makes the glory of thy praise his constant occupation.
 'Amid has opened the musk-bag of wisdom in singing thy praises, like the musk-bag upon which the stag prides itself.²
 Always, as long as men search for musk on the surface of the ground, and no musk deer lays aside its power of producing musk,
 May the perfection of thy justice reach such a height that the stag may extract musk from the hunting leopard.
 Mayest thou roam at large and enjoy thyself in the meadow of fortune, just as the stag roams over the meadows in spring time.
 Fasting has made his form which was like the Nārwan³ slender as a reed, and has made his face which was red as the Arghawān⁴ pale like the saffron.

² مشك mishk is said to be the congealed blood of the navel of the stag of Khitā. (Burhān-i-Qāṭi and Makhzanu-l-Adwīya). The latter work says "It is very difficult to procure genuine musk, it is only brought as a great rarity as a present to kings and great rulers mixed with saffron and a little camphor as a remedy for headache; and is used alone or with other drugs such as the testicles of the beaver (Castoreum) as a stimulant snuff in paralysis and other cold diseases of the brain, for which it is also used by inunction. Smelling it removes the evil effects of poisons, especially of bīsh (aconite) and qurūnu-s-sumbul. (?) It is also very useful as a collyrium in many diseases of the eye.

It is a cardiac tonic removing palpitation, and faintness, relieves dysentery and globulent distension. A suppository of musk assists parturition."

It is also the name given to the bile, and also to jaundice. (Burhān-i-Qāṭi)

In Vüllers we find اسرگ (Asparag) herba flava tingendo inserviens, alias زریر (Zarīr) or ورس (wars).

⁴ Another name for the Sīmurgh, and a synonym for anything rare and unattainable. (See Burhān-i-Qāṭi under the name عنقاي مغرب)

There is a long account of the 'Anqā in the Hayātū-l-Hayvān where it says on the authority of Qazwīnī that the 'Anqā is the largest of all birds which can seize an elephant as easily as a kite snatches up a rat. It once lived among men, but caused them so much annoyance that by the prayers of a holy prophet it was banished to an uninhabited island in mid ocean beyond the Equator, full of enormous animals. When the 'Anqā flies there is a sound like thunder and floods. It lives 2000 years, and pairs at the age of 500. It is said that the claws are made into large drinking cups. A description of the mode of capturing the 'Anqā is also given but is too long to quote.

Among the proverbs of the Arabs one is حلفت به عنقاء مغرب which is said of any one of whose reformation there is no hope. "May the Anqā fly away with him."

They also say الجدود والغول والعنقا نالذه اسما اشيا لم توجد ولم تكن Liberality, the Ghul, and the Anqā are three names of things unattainable and non-existent.

To dream of the 'Anqā is also said to ensure marrying a beautiful woman, or if already married, to ensure having a brave son.

Until the bird of my ambition swoops down upon the harvest of the lower world, I have made the harvest field of the sky full of grain-like stars.

Why does the moon display the halo-harvest when it does not shew a single grain to any one, whereas I with one single grain of manliness have bound many a sheaf.

By the light of the knowledge of God, I have made the newly wedded virgin bride of reality to shine in the chamber of wisdom with the brilliancy of the day.

The course of the heavenly bodies in the columns of the almanac of the Creation, I have proved one by one by comparison with the astronomical tables¹ of intellect.

In the bridle of four rings, that is the trappings of the four elements, great is the training which I have given the unruly steed of my passions.

I have made the parrot of my soul, whose cage is the form of this uncouth body which is like a midden, every moment to rival the nightingale of the verdant² garden.

The parrot has left for the garden, the kite of lust which is following it circling round and round my nature I have detained within the midden of the body.

In many an art for which³ the scientists had no taste

I have made as great progress, hundred fold as they are, as a man who follows but one art.

² The daughter of Afrasiyāb. When Bizhan undertook to clear the country of Armān of its plague of wild hogs, after fulfilling his task he was led by the machinations of his companion Gīrgīn, who was jealous of him, to intrude upon the retirement of Manizha, the beautiful daughter of Afrasiyāb, and press his suit, which he did with such success that after some time their amour was discovered and Gersiwāz was sent by Afrasiyāb to put Bizhan to death: by the intercession of Pīrān the punishment was averted, but Bizhan was imprisoned in a deep pit. At first Manizha was condemned to undergo the same punishment but her doom was changed and she was allowed to dwell near the pit, all the people being forbidden by proclamation to supply her with food. Eventually, by the help of Rustum, Bizhan was freed and he and Manizha went to Irān together. (See Atkinson's Shāh Nāmāh, pp. 300 and seqq.) See also page 116 note 5.

² اشراقية. The Illuminati. A sect of Philosophers, of whom Plato was one, who, instead of following the precepts of any revealed law, looked to their own proper inspiration and mental illumination, which they held to be the result of spiritual meditation. Hājī Khalifāh, III. p. 87, writes as follows:
"Philosophia illuminationis (Hekmet el-ishrāc) sive Neo-Platonica inter veteres disciplinas philosophicas eundem locum tenet quem Theosophia inter doctrinas Islami simili modo, quo philosophia physica et theologica inter illas disciplinas locum tenet quem theologia dogmatico-scholastica inter has.

In the حاجي ملا عادي سبزواري شرح منظومه we find: Philosophers are of four kinds,—those who arrive at wisdom simply by meditation, those who arrive at it simply by purification of the mind by seclusion and retirement, those who arrive at it by combining these two. These last are called the Ishrāqī sect.

¹ لادن Ladan. The resinous balsamic juice of Cistus creticus and other species; according to the Burhān-i-Qāṭi it is called also عنبر على Honey-ambergris and is used in medicine. It is the juice of a plant growing in sandy soil, of which goats are very fond, and their hair becomes covered with the exudation, the best is collected from their beards; si femina quædam, cui in utero fœtus mortuus sit, vaginam suam vapore ladani vaporaverit, fœtus ille mortuus illico excidit. See also Ibn Baīṭār (Sonthheimer) I. p. 409.

It is the מִרְרָה of Genesis xxxvii. 25 and xliii. 11, where it is translated in our version myrrh. The Greeks called it στακθή. The true myrrh (Ar.

مر murrūn) is different.

The اشهب Ashhab is the white ambergris which was accounted the best.

³ MSS. (A) and (B) have فیض عزیزان but غریزان is a better reading.

⁴ Qitrān, the exudation from species of mountain pines, black in colour, used according to the Burhān-i-Qāṭi (and Qāmūs) for inunction of camels affected with mange. It is, according to these, the exudation of the tree called عرعر 'ar'ar, (Juniper) the properties of which are thus enumerated in the Makhzanu-l-Adwīya: Deobstruent, diuretic, emmenagogue, relieves cough and chest pains, and pain in the spleen; relieves flatulence, hæmorrhoids, flatulent colic or uterine pains. Sitting over a hot infusion of it causes uterine spasm, while a poultice of it is antisudorific. I can find no mention in either of these books of its use as an abortifacient. It is perhaps Juniperus Sabina (Savine) which is powerfully ecbotic. According to Ibn Baīṭār (Sonth.) II. p. 94, it is Pinus cedrus, but this appears to be incorrect. See also II. p. 189, su عرعر 'Ar'ar.

The word سترون is derived in Burhān-i-Qāṭi from استر - and ون (i.e.) mule-like, because mules have no offspring.

Present me with the robe of honour of thy protection, for thy court is my original refuge, lo I have fled to my refuge. Keep far from the darkness of infidelity,² hypocrisy, hatred and enmity, that heart which I have embellished with the light of sincerity to Thee.

² شرك Shirk. "Idolatry: paganism: polytheism." Ascribing plurality to the Deity. Associating anything with God.

The Wahhābī writers define Shirk as of four kinds:

شرك العلم	Shirku-l-'ilm.	Ascribing knowledge to others than God.
شرك التصرف	Shirku-t-taṣarruf.	Ascribing power to others than God.
شرك العبادة	Shirku-l-'ibādah.	Offering worship to created things.
شرك العادة	Shirku-l-'ādah.	The performance of ceremonies which imply reliance on others than God.

(the White Palace) in the year 664 H.¹ He was one of the "Forty Slaves" of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn, each one of whom had attained to the dignity of Amīr. Inasmuch as the reins of government had been in his hands even in the days when he was merely Ulugh Khān, the affairs of the State very quickly came into his grasp. He would not allow people of low origin to have the slightest authority. It is said that a man named Fakhr, who had for years served as chief of the Bāzār, had recourse to one of the Sultān's more intimate attendants, and offered a very large sum² on the condition that if the Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Balban would speak with him once only, he would give him all this money and valuable property.³ When this request was represented to the Sultān he would not entertain it, and said 'to converse with people of low and mean extraction will lower my prestige.' He was altogether opposed to oppression, and, in the early days of his reign, punished certain of his Amīrs on account of some tyranny which they had practised upon their subjects, and having handed over one or two of them⁴ he permitted the complainants to exact retaliation, and after that these Amīrs had paid the blood money, for shame they could never come out of their houses as long as they lived, and at last they left the world.

He bought his release with a sum of 20,000 silver tankahs but never left his house afterwards and died from shame. (See also Elliott, III. 101)

In this same year of his reign Tātār Khān the son of Arsalān Khān sent from Lakhnautī sixty-three elephants as a present; and in this year the Sultān proceeding to Patīālī¹ and Kanpila, built the forts of Patīālī, Kanpila, Bhojpūr, and certain other forts, and with five thousand cavalry crossed the Ganges on the pretext of making preparation for an expedition to the Jūd hills. In two days after leaving Dehli he arrived in the midst of the territory of Kāithar² and put to death every male, even those of eight years of age, and bound the women, and inflicted such chastisement that up till the reign of Jalālu-d-Dīn the territory of Badāon and Amroha remained safe from the ravages of the Kāitharis,³ and he threw open all the roads of Bihār and Jaunpūr, and all the roads of the Eastern part of India which were closed, and made over the territory of Mīwāt, which lies in the Doāb, to strong handed governors, with orders to put to death the rebels, which they did, imprisoning some. ² Shaikh Sharfu-d-Dīn Muṣliḥ ibn 'Abdu-llah as-Sa'dī. He was a native of Shīrāz where his family for generations had been famed for eminence in learning. He is said to have lived to a great age, accounts differing between 102 and 112 years (Beale says 120). He spent 30 years in acquiring sciences, 30 years in travelling (he made the Hajj fourteen times) and 30 years in quietude: He died in the year 691 H. (1291 A.D.) He was the contemporary of many great men, among them Amīr Khusrū of Dehli who entertained him. His Kulliyāt are of world wide reputation. The Majma'ul Fuṣṣah (I. 274) from which the above is taken does not give the date of Sa'dī's birth, and gives the date of his death as 791 H. which is wrong. According to the account given by Beale Sa'dī was born "about the year 571 A.H." The above account would however place his birth in either 580 A.H. or 579 A.H. Of his works the Gulistān and Būstān are the best known.

He while in his assembly read 30,000 as 3,000 and, marching with a large force, by rapid and continuous marches arrived at the boundaries of Bāgh-i-Sabz,³ on the banks of the Lāhor river where he engaged the infidels and attained the dignity of martyrdom. This event took place in Zū-Hijjah of the year 683 H,⁴ and Mir Hasan⁵ of Dehlī composed a prose lament, and sent it to Dehlī. It is copied here in its very words.

The Lament of Mir Hasan.

It is an old story that the tyrannous sphere, though it may for a time knit the knot of complaisance, and make a covenant of mutual sincerity, turns from its promise, and that discordant time, although it professes to shew acquiescence, and makes specious promises of fidelity, fails to perform them.

It seems probable therefore that the lament should be attributed to Mīr Khusrū. The Hasan which occurs in Text and both MSS. (A)(B) may have had its origin in a copyist's error.

gift back again without any treacherous conduct having been committed. The habits and customs of the oppressive times are cast in the same mould, whether by experience or by hearsay, we see or hear that whomsoever it perceives coming to perfection like the moon, it desires to darken the face of his fulness with the blot of defect, and whomsoever it finds rising like a cloud him it strives to tear to pieces, and to scatter his substance to the extreme boundaries of the horizon. As in this orchard of amazement and garden of regrets, no rose blooms without a thorn so no heart escapes the thorn of sorrow. Alas! for the newly sprung verdure which has become yellow, withered in the bloom of its beauty by the autumn of calamity. Alas! for the many fresh-springing trees which have been laid low in the dust of the ground by the fierce blast of Death.

Consider the winds of Autumn, how chill they are and cold,
The cowardly blows they have dealt alike at the young and old.

One of the examples of this allegory is the death of the late Emperor Qā'ān-i-Mulk Ghāzī,¹ may God make manifest his demonstrations and weigh down the scale with his excellencies, on Friday the last day of the month of Zū-l-Hijjah in the year 683 A.H., when the moon, like kindness in the heart of infidels, could nowhere be seen, the Sun with the company of the army of Islām came forth to smite with the sword, and the great Prince who was the Sun of the heaven of the kingdom, with the light of holy war shining on his noble brow, and the unchangeable determination of "jihād" firmly planted in his illustrious mind, placed his auspicious foot in the stirrup. By night they submitted to his judgment which solved all difficulties, that Itimar with the whole of his army had advanced into the plain at a distance of three farsangs. When morning broke, he commenced to march intending to leave that place, and at a distance of one farsang coming face to face with those accursed ones,² elected to draw up their forces in a place on the outskirts

Accordingly he very strongly fortified a large village which was close to the river, and made such dispositions that when the infidels came against it, both rivers² should be in the rear of his army, so that neither could any man of his own army turn in flight nor could any injury be inflicted upon his army by that troublesome horde³ and in very truth that choice of position was the acme of caution and the very height of skill in that world-conquering Khān, but since when Fate is adverse the thread of all plans becomes tangled, and the orderly row of enterprises becomes disordered,

He who falls in with evil fortune by the way,
His affairs fall out just as his enemies desire.
His Fortune like a mad man loses the right way,
His senses, like the nightblind, fall into the well.

By chance that day the Moon and the Sun, which may be compared to kings, were suspended in the sign of the Fish,⁴ and Mars, whose blood-red aspect is entirely due to the blood of the princes of the people, had drawn out from the quiver of that sign the arrow of disappointment and the dart of disobedience against that Orion⁵ (white) girdled Khān, who was like Leo coming forth from a watery sign; the house of fear and calamity and the proofs of sedition and signs of harm thus became evidently manifest, while the hint and indication of the proverb "In face of Fate wide becomes strait" became written on the consecutive pages (of his history). In short, at midday just as the courier of the heaven reached the country of noon, and the day of that world-conquering Emperor was approaching its decline, suddenly a band made its appearance from the direction of those infidels. The Khān-i-Ghāzī at that same moment mounted his horse and issued an order in obedience to which all the cavalry and the body servants and retinue and retainers, in accordance with the mandate 'Kill the infidels all of them',¹ drew up in a line a hundred times stronger than the rampart of Sikandar.² After ordering the right wing and dressing the left wing, he himself of noble qualities, stood in the centre like the moon and the host of the stars, ready for the jihād, while the Tātār infidels, let confusion and dismay come upon them, crossed the river of Lāhor, and confronted the ranks of the Muslims. Thereupon these wild-loving desert-born savages, placing the feathers of the owl³ upon their illomened heads, while the Ghāzīs of Islām, kings of Turkestan and Khilj and notables of Hindustān, and all the soldiery made the battlefield a place of prayer—as the Holy Apostle, may the blessings and peace of God be upon him, declared that the holy war was closely allied to prayer, saying We return from the lesser holy war to the greater holy war,⁴ reciting the *takbīr*⁵

Hence the proverb لَوْ كَانَ فِي الْبُؤْمَةِ خَيْرٌ مَا تَرَكَهَا لَصَيَادٍ.

raised their hands in prayer, and in the first attack they put to the sword a considerable number of able-bodied men of the Mughūl cavalry, and the lances of the Malik of the Court so wounded the limbs of their enemies that above each of them the blood spurted up like a spear, while sixty selected Turks interweaving their arrows like closely-woven cloth, made it appear as though the weft (of existence) of the Tātārs was being torn to shreds.¹

In the beginning of the fray the arrow of the king leapt forth
The Tātārs were all laid low.

As often as the great Lord, lion-hearted, wielding the sword, with a blade as bright as his own faith, sallied forth to attack from the midst of the ranks.

You would say that the sword was trembling in that battlefield at the excellencies of the monarch, and becoming in its entirety a tongue was saying to him, Up and make an end of these accursed ones, and entrust their discomfiture to thy servants, but do thou thyself refrain from personal action, for the sword is double faced, and the scimitar of Fate pitiless in its wounding—no one can tell what may happen to any one of us from the decree of the All powerful. I close my eyes against the fatal eye.²

Go not, that I may bind thy dust upon mine eyes.

Act not, for I greatly fear the evil eye.

The heaven has never seen such a brilliant countenance,

I am as rue upon that fire to guard that eye.³

135. As long as he strenuously performed the duties of fighting and warfare, each of the weapons as it were entered into colloquy with him—the spear was saving, Oh King! refrain your hand from me

² عين الكمال ʿayn al-kamāl An eye supposed to have the power of killing with one glance. The Arabs say فقا الله عنك عين الكمال faqā lillāhi ʿanaka ʿayn al-kamāl May God blind the fateful eye to thee.

³ سپند spīnd According to Burhān-i-Qāṭi, a seed which is burned to avert the consequences of being "overlooked" by the evil eye. See Vüller's Lexicon.

this day, for the tongue of my point by reason of constant fighting and slaying is blunted, and I have no power left of opposing the enemy with thrusts, I fear lest I should leap up and should commit some untoward act. The arrow too was saying,

Thou, the knot of whose bowstring opens the knot of the Jauzhar, do not advance to meet this danger.¹

I myself in rushing forth to destruction cast dust upon my head, lest the close-eyed beauty of the heaven,² who sits on the fifth roof near the door of the eighth mansion,³ sitting in ambush, out of temerity and spite, should discharge against you the shaft of error from the bow of fraud and malice; the lasso was saying, to-day the thread of planning should not be let go from the hand of deliberation, for I am contorted with anxiety at this precipitate conflict and ill-considered battle; wait a while! for Islām and the Muslims are like the tent ropes connected with the tent of your favours. Oh God! in dealing with this people, do not so long delay putting the halter round their necks.

I have willingly put my neck in the noose for thy sake
Thou art my lassoer, who takest me with the noose of thy locks.

In short, that mighty king, the defender of the faith, the uprooter of infidelity, from mid-day till eventide attacked that impious crowd with the whole main body of his army, cheerfully and willingly, while the shouts of the victors in the fight, and the clamour of those eager for the fray⁴ deafened the ears of the world and of the sky,⁵ and tongues of fire which leapt from the heads of

⁴ MS. (A) وغوغای غالبان و غا و غلبان طالبان غزا. This is a better reading than the text.

⁵ MSS. (A) and (B) read صاخ سما for اسماع سما in the text.

In that uproar like the day of resurrection every one thought of this Āyat *A day when a man will flee from his own brother,*¹ the surface of the earth, like the eyes of old men who have lost their sons² was full of blood, and the face of the sky like the head of sons who have killed their fathers, full of dust.

Alas ! my father why dost thou submit to the steel of the fire-like sword

Oh ! dost thou wish to inflict the wound of orphanage on my heart.

In the very midst of this weary conflict, and amid all this pain and anguish, suddenly an arrow shot by Fate struck the wing of that falcon of the field of foray, and the bird of his life took its flight from the cage of the body of that noble one to the gardens of the Compassionate and meadows of *Riẓwān*³

Verily we are God's and verily to Him do we return.⁴

At that same moment the backbone of the religion of Muḥammad, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him, broke like the heart of sorrowful orphans, and the rampart of the religion of Muḥammad fell in like the grave of poor people of low origin, and the assistance which the arm of the king alone could give slipped from our grasp, and the confidence which the army of the Muslims had possessed⁵ was lost. Exactly at the time of sunset, the sun of the life of that king whose sun was setting sank into the west of extinction, and the heaven, after the habit of mourners, dyed its raiment blue, while falling tears began to course down both its cheeks. Saturn, by way of fulfilling the requirements of fidelity and the demands of mourning, turned its robe to black and bewailed the people of Hindūstān because of his death. Jupiter, in pity for that dust besoiled body and blood-stained mantle rent his garments and cast his turban in the dust.

In MS. (B) the word پسر is omitted.

And Mars, may the hand of his power be tightly closed as the eye of the beauties, and the face of his sustenance be dark as the locks of Ethiopians, sore wounded by compassion for that calamity, with a rankling thorn¹ which brought forth his heart's blood, was trembling like the Fish² before the Sun, and like the Ram³ in the hands of the slaughterer, while the Sun, for shame that it had not striven to avert this calamity and prevent this disaster, came not forth, but sank below the earth, and Venus when she saw what violence the heavenly bodies were undergoing at the hands of Time, played her tambour more vehemently,⁴ changed the tune of the drum, and commenced music in a fresh measure, and because of the death of that slave-cherishing king, others in place of uttering musical strains began to weep, and Mercury⁵ who in forage and conquests in accord with the scribe, used to write many records of victory, in that tyranny⁶ was blackening his face with the contents of his inkhorn, and was clothing himself in a garment of paper made of the sheets of his own records, while the new moon in the shape of a crescent on the horizon, with bowed stature, in that day of judgment which had visited the earth, was striking its head on the wall and performing all the customary mourning duties. 137.

The طنبور tanbūr is a kind of mandolin with chords of brass wire played with a plectrum. The word was originally دنب برة from its being likened to the tail of a lamb. (Lane).

Thou placest thy cheek in the dust, alas, I wish not this for thee

Moon of my days, I do not wish thee to pass beneath the Earth.

If thou goest out to the chase (i.e. diest) thy dust is my life :
My life ! is the solitude of thy dust pleasing to thee ? I do not wish it for thee.

May God, be He exalted and blessed, raise the purified and sanctified soul of that warrior prince to lofty heights and high dignities, and give him, from time to time, cups full of the brilliancy of his beauty and glory, and make all the kindness, and clemency, and affection, and care which he evinced towards this broken down worthless one, a means of increasing the dignity and wiping out the faults of that prince. Amen, Oh Lord of the worlds !

And Mir Khusrū¹ also on that day fell a prisoner into the hands of Lahorī, a servant of the Mughūl, and had to carry a nosebag and horsecloth upon his head. He recounts this circumstance in these words—

I who never even placed a rose upon my head,
He placed a load on my head and said "It is a rose."²

And he composed in poetry and sent to Dehlī two elegies written in *tarkīb-band*³ which are found in the anthology known as ¹ میر خسرو For an account of Mir Khusrū see index reference.

The poet, relates some of his experiences as a captive—"At the time that this learner of evil, the author, was a captive in the hands of the Mughūls—may such days never return!—travelling in a sandy desert, where the heat made my head boil like a cauldron, I and the man who was with me on horseback arrived thirsty at a stream by the roadside. Although the naphtha of my life was heated I would not inflame it with oil by drinking a draught of water. Both my guard and his horse drank their fill and expired immediately." Elliott, III, Appendix, p. 545.

² جل means both horsecloth and also rose. There is a difference in the readings. MS. (A) reads, توبره بر سر نهاد و گفتا جل MS. (B) is like the text.

³ ترکیب بند. In this class of composition a certain number of verses having the same metre and rhyme are followed by a couplet in the same metre but having a different rhyme—then the original rhyme is reverted to for a certain number of verses, and is again followed by a fresh couplet having the same metre, but a rhyme differing from both the original rhyme and that of the first interpolated couplet—and so on. In Tarjī-band as Ghurratu-l-Kamāl.¹ For a space of a month more or less, folk used to sing those tarkīb-bands and used to chant them as threnodies over their dead from house to house.

The following is one of them :—

Is this the Resurrection day or is it a calamity from heaven 138.
which has come to light ?

Is this a disaster or has the day of Judgment appeared upon the earth ?

That breach which has appeared this year in Hindustān has given entrance to the flood of sedition below the foundation of the world.

The assembly of his friends has been scattered like the petals of the rose before the wind.

Autumn the leaf scatterer has, one would say, appeared in the garden,²

Every eyelash, in the absence of friends, has become a spear-point to the eye, and each point of the spear has brought blood spouting forth to a spear's length.

The heart writhes in agony since Time has broken the thread of companionship ;

When the string is broken, the pearls are scattered far and wide.

Such a flood of tears has been shed by the people on all sides that five fresh rivers have appeared around Multān.³

I wished to bring my heart's fire upon the tongue in the form of words,

When lo! a hundred tongues of fire appeared within my mouth.

has been stated elsewhere, the plan is similar to the above, but the interpolated couplet is always the same. This interpolation occurs not more than seven times both in Tarkīb-band and in Tarjī-band.

¹ Ghurratu-l-kamāl. The longest of the four Dīwāns of Amīr Khusrū. It contains poems written from the 34th to the 42nd year of his life ; for an account of this and the other "Dīwāns" see Elliott, III. Appendix. See also Hājī Khalifah, IV. 311.

³ MS. (A) agrees with the text. MS. (B) has a worthless reading

هیچ دیگر اندر مولتان آمد پدید

I dug deep in my breast, empty of all desire, and tears burst forth from both my eyes ; when the earth is hollowed out then springs of water make their appearance.

Weeping has taken the bloom off my cheek, and disgraced me, because by reason of it, the skin has left my cheek and the bones have come in sight.

The planets are all conjoined in my eyes¹ perchance it portends a storm, since in a watery constellation a conjunction of planets is seen.

I only wish for that same collection (of friends) and how can this be!

It is essentially impossible—how can this Banātu-n-Na'sh become the Pleiades² (How can mourning become joy).

With what omen³ did the king lead his army from Multān and draw the infidel-slaying sword in order to slay the infidels.

¹ The text has در چشم we should read در چشم as in MS. (A).

The astrologers state that when a conjunction of all the planets shall take place in one of the watery constellations (Scorpio, Pisces, Aquarius) a deluge like that which destroyed the world in the time of Noah will occur again.

² This couplet differing as it does in rhyme, but being in the same metre is characteristic of ترکیب بند tarkīb band, see p. 196, note 3.

بنات النعش Banātu-u-na'sh, this name "The daughters of the bier" is given by the Arabs to the constellation Ursa Major. See Lane, s. v. نعش.

The origin of the name "The daughters of the bier" is said by Sedillot in his Notes to the Prolegomenes des Tables Astronomiques d'Oloug Beg, to be that "the Arab Christians called the "Chariot" or the four stars composing the body of the Great Bear نعش لعازر Feretrum Lazari, and the three stars (the handle of the plough) of the tail Maria, Martha ac ancilla." The Persians have a superstition that if two people are together and one of them points out this constellation to the other, one of the two will die within the year.

The allusion to the Pleiades is explained by the following verses of Ibnu-l-Amīd (see de Slane, Ibn Khall. : III. 263).

"I have seized on one of the opportunities which life offers to form with my companions a part of the band of the Pleiades, and, if you do not aid us to maintain our rank in that choir by sending us some wine, we shall be sad like the daughters of the hearse."

The Pleiades is considered a fortunate asterism (cf.) Job xxxviii. 13, "The sweet influences of Pleiades."

³ MSS. (A) and (B) read تاجه طالع.

When they brought him tidings of the enemy, with that strength which he possessed, ruthlessly he displayed his wrath and unfurled his standards.
 That army which was then present sought for no second army,
 For this reason that Rustum must not be indebted to an armed host.¹
 One assault took him from Multān to Lāhor, saying
 In my reign can any one rebel against me?
 Am I not such a lion, that my sword which is like fire and water
 Has by its slaying turned every year of theirs to dust and ashes?
 Such torrents of blood often have I set flowing over the earth,
 That the vulture flies² over the surface of blood like a duck over the water.
 In this year to such an extent do I stain the earth with their blood,
 That the evening twilight reddens with the reflection of the earth.
 He was bent upon this enterprise and did not know that the Destiny of heaven had drawn the line of fate across the writing of the page of intention.
 His eyes were smitten by the stars; if I have the power I must heat a needle, and like a shooting star thrust it into the eye of the seven planets.
 The first day of the month became Muḥarram³ for him, 140.
 not for him only but for all people.

² MSS. (A) and (B) read بر سر خون پر کشید.

³ MS. (A) reads غرر شد محرم.

The Martyr Prince was killed on the last day of Zūl Hijjah the morrow of which was the sacred month of Muḥarram.

The 'Āshūrā (the tenth) is a voluntary fast day observed on the tenth of the month of Muḥarram. We read in the Mishkāt (VII.) Ibn Abbās said I did not see his highness intend the fast of any day which he considered more noble than the 'Āshūrā and the fast of Ramaḥān." Again "the fast of Since at the end of Zūl Hijjah he drove his dagger into the neck of his enemies.

That the day of 'Āshūra might arrive he entered the ranks of holy war like Ḥusain; the dust of his steed served as collyrium for the eye of the brilliant moon.

What an hour was that when the infidel reached the van of the army!

One upon another his squadrons passed over the river and came upon them unawares.¹

Thou didst see the king's steed,² casting the cloud of dust to the sky.

The wind-footed courier charging the infidels worthless as dust.

He raised a turmoil among the stars by the shouts of his army.

He produced an earthquake in the world by the rushing of his cavalry,

From the roll of the drums, the neighing of the horses, and the shouts of their riders, he caused a quaking of the plain and desert and mountain.

His horses were reeking (with sweat), with shoes as hot as fire, so that the hoofs of each fiery-shod steed struck sparks.³

What awe was there! at one time drawing up for battle, What terror was there! at another time raising the battle cries.⁴

141. From the flash of the sword in his hand he scattered heat and oppressiveness around him.

the day 'Āshūrā I am hopeful will cover the faults of the coming year." (Matthews, Vol. I. p. 402).

"It is the only day of Muḥarram observed by the Sunnī Muslims, being the day on which, it is said, God created Adam and Eve, heaven and hell, the tablet of decree, the pen, life and death." (Hughes, Dict. of Islām).

² MS. (A) reads خنگ instead of جاگ as in the text.

³ MSS. (A) (B.) read وز سم هر آتشین نعلی.

⁴ MS. (A) آن چه هیبت بود گاهی کارزار آراستن
وان چه دهشت بود گاهی تیرو دار انگیختن

MS. (B) reads the same as (A) repeating هیبت in the second line.

While the very thought of his spear pricked the heart like so many thorns.
 The brave-hearted were attacking, bent on consuming their enemies,
 The faint-hearted were plotting intent upon flight.
 [Whiles, the king the cherisher of brave men, in that field of battle,
 Was doing deeds of bravery and urging on the warriors].¹
 Striking manfully blow after blow upon the ribs of the unmanly cowards,
 And sending forth flames of fire from his well tempered sword.
 Raising aloft like Jamshīd the standard, to restrain the demons,
 Urging on his steed, like the sun, to capture kingdoms.
 Bringing the sky into supplication from that affliction.
 Making the sun perform the *Tayammum*² with that dust.
 [At that time when there was a distinction between brave and coward,
 Many a one there was whose lips were dry and his cheeks pale].³

گاه شاه مرد پرور اندران میدان کار
 کار مردان کردن و مردان کار انگیختن

² تیمم. tayammum. This word signifies "Intention" and is restricted to the Wuḥū or ablutional ceremony performed with sand instead of water, which is permissible under certain circumstances, as for instance when water cannot be procured without incurring undue risk or labour. Qur'ān V. 9. "If...ye cannot find water then take fine surface sand and wipe your faces, and your hands therewith." This like so many of Muḥammad's injunctions was excellent as a sanitary measure.

³ The text and MS. (B) are both wrong here, repeating the preceding band as though this poem were a tarjī'band. The following is the correct reading as given in MS. (A)

اندران وقتی که فرق از مرد تا نامرد بود
 ای بسا کسی را که لبها خشک و روها زرد بود

Consequently in the translation I have omitted the incorrectly repeated lines, and have given these in their place.

The day was cast into darkness when they hurled¹ one upon the other,

The sun became pale when dagger was interweaved with dagger.

The day was nearing its decline, seeing that the swords² were weaving a sky of rust over the sun of the army.

The rows of swords in both ranks resembled (the teeth of) a comb,

The combatants are entangled one with the other like hair with hair.³

142.

The Earth looked like a sheet of water when cuirass was knit with cuirass, the plain resembled a rose garden when shield was woven with shield.

The heaven flies away as though flying from an arrow,

The arrows flying above their heads are thick as the feathers of a wing.

When half the force of the infidels had their heads swept off by the sword

Those infidel heads⁴ which were matted together like the locks of black hair.

Ruby-red drops of blood sprang like tears⁵ from the sword
So that the gold-woven standards were besprinkled with the jewels.

Each single head was cleft in twain when the swords blows met.

¹ MS. (B) reads تافتند which is the best reading.

² This is the reading of MS. (A) که از زنگار تیغ MS. (B) follows the text but with no intelligible meaning. The reading of MS. (A) is not quite satisfactory and it seems possible that we should read از جنگار تیغ. i.e. The warriors' swords.

³ MS. (A) has the following:—

شاه را مانند آن صفهای تیغ از هر دو سو

MS. (B) has شانه را مانند while the text has this as an alternative reading for شانه را زانست.

MS. (B) is the reading adopted for this line, reading however بافتند (text) and MS. (A) for تافتند MS. (B) in the second line.

⁴ MS. (A) کافران هر سو.

⁵ Insert از before تیغ MS. (A).

The cloven heads became as one again when head was thrust against head.

The slain were lying on all sides of that verdant plain ¹.

Like the figures which they weave on the green brocade.¹

Long had they been striving even from morning till evening, face to face, and hair to hair, and hand to hand.²

The king ³ wished to spread the carpet of victory but to what avail

Since the heavens had woven that carpet in another pattern.

⁴[His auspicious sword did not cease from contest for one moment.

From the declining day till night in that day of declining fortune].

Oh Lord ! was that blood which flowed over the face of the plain 143.

Or was it a river urging its waves toward the lips of the thirsty.

Just as water drops to the earth when you sift it ⁵ in a sieve

So the blood dript from the limbs of the weary warriors.

The mortally wounded lay in the death-agony writhing on the ground, while from his throat blood burst in billows, spouting in the air.

The arrows drove the bodies over the sea of blood like boats,

Plying their oars madly and urging their course onwards.⁶

¹ MS. (A) reads کشتگان افتاده در اطراف آن صحرای سبز which is the reading adopted.

² MS. (A) reads. روبروی و مو بمری و بسو بسو بر یافتند

MS. (B) روبرو و مو بمری و بسو بسو بر یافتند

³ MS. (B) reads incorrectly خواست شد

یک زمان شمشیر اقبالش نیاسود از قتال

از زوال روز تاشب اندران روز زوال

⁵ MS. (A) بیزي

⁶ These lines follow here in MS. (A) in the text they are five couplets later.

The river bore those (the infidel enemies) to hell and the stream bore these (the Muslims) to Paradise, although the blood of infidel and Muslim was flowing side by side. The chargers were plunging and the heads of the riders falling.

The feet of the horses speeding and the heads of the riders bowling along.

Every spurt of blood which spurted from the body struck by an arrow

Leapt without restraint like a man who leaps to avoid an arrow.¹

The arrow of every man who from stoutness of heart had an arm nerved for the fight, fitted accurately to the bow flew straight to the heart of the enemy's army.

And he who from faint-heartedness has lost command of his arms and legs, was running now to the water and now to the plain.

The king, the commander of the army, was urging on the charger of his fortune, and it galloped with him in drawing up his line, and planning the scheme of action.

144. The heavens turned Victory backwards seizing it by the hair,

Although Victory was speeding towards us having left the accursed (infidels).

² [The infidels were expecting the coming of night, to take to flight,

Suddenly the scale of the balance turned against us].

What a night was that! when the sun had fallen from the sky!

And demons were hurling fire upon the earth, and the stars had fallen.

When nothing of day remained for that sun of fortune.³

² Here again the text and MS. (B) are wrong. Here should follow as in MS. (A).

کافر اذدر انتظار شب که تا بیرون شود ناگهان میزان امارا پله دگر گون شود

³ These are omitted in MS. (B.). MS. (A.) reads آفتاب بخت را. This and the following are transposed in the text.

Some little daylight remained when the sun (of royalty) fell.

Although Husain of the famous Kerbelā¹ was in straits for want of water.

He was the Muḥammad whose end came upon him in the water.²

The heart of mankind became (full of holes like) a fishing net because, from the craft of the demon the royal signet which was on the hand of Solomon fell into the water.³

The infidels were wallowing in blood as the donkey wallows in the gutter, the believers lay in the mud like jewels in the mire.

One army was passing through the water of the flood of disaster,

The other parched with thirst had fallen in with a mirage.

Each one of them was put down on the tablet of the earth for this reason that their affairs had fallen into the account of the day of reckoning.

It refers to the circumstances already related under which the Khān-i-Shahīd, the Martyr prince met his death. Firishta relates that having defeated the enemy the "generals of Hindustān discarded all caution and pursued the fugitives while the Muḥammad, the Martyr Khān, who had not performed the mid-day prayer, went hastily with 500 of his army to the margin of a large tank which then was near, alighted and engaged in prayer when his party were suddenly attacked by one of the Mughūl Generals with 2,000 men who were in ambush" (Tārīkh-i-Firishta, I. 143. Bombay Edition.) The Prince after a gallant fight was killed by an arrow and most of his men killed. It was here Amīr Khusrū was taken prisoner but escaped.

Solomon's famous signet ring in which lay the secret of all his power was stolen from him by the jinn Aṣṭarjī who while Solomon was bathing, personated him and demanded the ring from his wife (Yaminah) to whom he had entrusted it. Obtaining it from her he sat on the throne and ruled the kingdom, Solomon having been cast out as an imposter. wages, one of which he ate but sold the other to feed the poor. In the meantime Āṣaf recognized that it was not Solomon who was ruling, and brought 40 holy men (راجب) before the throne each bearing an open copy of the Taurāt (Book of the Law) which they read aloud; Aṣṭarjī the demon was not able to bear this, rushed up to the roof of the palace, cast the ring into the water and fled. Solomon happened to be fishing that day but being tired fell asleep on the bank of the river, a large snake came out of the water and taking the green bough of a tree in its mouth was fanning Solomon as he slept, when the fisherman's daughter passed by; she ran off to her father and begged him to marry her to Solomon. Eventually this was settled (though Solomon protested his inability to provide a dowry) and Solomon married the girl. The fish which had swallowed the ring fell into their net on the following day and was given to Solomon with two other fish, Solomon took them and sold two of them and gave the other to the fisherman's daughter to fry. She struck a knife into it and the ring fell out, the whole house becoming illuminated, she screamed and fainted, Solomon seized the ring and put it on, thus recovering his lost kingdom.

- In the sixteenth year of his age, in succession to his grandfather, by the intervention of Malik Kachhan, who was called Itimar, and other Amirs who were disaffected to the Martyred Khān, succeeded to the throne of Empire.² Then having bestowed Multān upon Khusrū Khān with his family and dependents, they sent him off there under some pretext and exiled his adherents, and when the Empire became established he appointed all the officers of the state to their old posts in the kingdom, and Malik Nizāmu-d-Dīn³ was appointed *Dādbeg*⁴ and they gave Khwāja Khaṭīru-d-Dīn the title of Khwāja-i-Jahān, and Malik Shāhik Amīr Ḥājib that of Wazīr Khān, and Malik Qiyāmu-l-Mulk obtained the post of Wakildar: and after six months he left Dihli and founded the palace of Kīlūgharī, which is now a ruin, near the ford of Khwāja Khizr on the banks of the river Jumna; there he held public audiences, and by craft getting hold of the Mughals who had newly become Moslems, put the majority of them to death, and banished a certain number of them. The chief author and cause of this action was Malik Nizāmu-d-Dīn 'Alāqa the

was given Sāmāna, his daughter was united in marriage to Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Kaiqubād. At the end of the month of Zūl Hijjah in the abovementioned year, news arrived that the Tatār infidels whose leader was Itimar had attacked Lahore and the frontier of Multān. The Sultān appointed Shāhik Bārbak with thirty thousand cavalry and giving him the title of Khān-i-Jahān despatched him to oppose them. He pursued the Tatārs as far as the foot of the Jūd hills, and put the greater number of them to the sword, or made them prisoners, and having repulsed them he came to the Court.

Inasmuch as Sultān Kaiqubād, during the lifetime of Sultān Balban, had not attained the desires of his heart, and learned instructors had been placed in charge of him, at this time when he attained to the Empire finding himself completely unfettered he occupied himself with the full fruition of lustful delights, while the majority of the people took advantage of the luxuriousness of his reign to spend their days in wantonness and license. The ministrants of debauchery, jesters, singers and jugglers were admitted to close intimacy in his Court, in marked contrast to his grandfather's reign, and learning, and piety, and integrity were nothing valued; and Malik Nizāmu-d-Dīn 'Alāqa seeing that the Sultān was immersed in luxury and enjoyment, and utterly careless of his kingdom's affairs, stretched forth the hand of oppression and went to unwarranted lengths. The vain desire of sovereignty came into his heart, so that he set about devising the downfall of the family of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn. In the first instance having instigated Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn to murder Kai Khusrū the son of Sultān Muḥammad the Martyr, he summoned him from Multān, and in the town of Rohtak raised him to the dignity of martyrdom and sent him to join his father.

159. In the same way he accused Khwāja-i-Jahān of an imaginary crime and had him publicly paraded on an ass through the city, he also imprisoned the Amīr and Maliks of the house of Balban who were related to the Mughals who had recently become Moslems, and deported them to distant fortresses, and destroyed the glory of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn.

Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Bughrā Khān, when the tidings of his son's ruinous condition reached him in Lakhnautī, wrote a letter full of hints couched in the language of enigma and innuendo to Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn warning him of the sinister intentions of Nizāmu-l-Mulk. Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn out of the hot-headedness of youth, did not act on his father's advice, and after much correspondence it was decided that Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn should leave Lakhnautī, and Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn should start from Dihlī and that they should visit each other in Oudh.

From what Mīr Khusrū may the mercy of God be upon him, says in the Qirānu-s-Sa'dain,¹ and also from the *Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī*² we learn that Bughrā Khān, on his accession to the throne of Bengāla with the title of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn, was coming with a large gathering to attack Dihlī, and Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn also having collected his forces from the neighbouring districts advanced against him in the direction of Oudh; and since the river Sarū³ lay between them the son alighted on this side and the father on the other side, and neither was able to cross the river. The Amirs and Maliks of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn's party, intervened with advice to come to peaceful terms, and Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn with a party of special retainers crossed the river, as it had been agreed that the son should sit upon the throne, and the father, standing below the throne, should pay the customary dues of reverence and respect to him. Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn from excess of desire forgot that compact, and on the instant his eyes fell upon the splendid presence of his father he came down from his throne and running barefooted, was about to fall at his feet. The father however would not permit this, whereupon each embraced the other and for a long time they wept bitterly, and in spite of all the father's attempts to take his stand at the foot of the throne, the son forcibly took him by the hand, and led him to the throne and seated him upon it. Then he also took his seat, and after a long time the Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn returned to his own camp, and sent as presents to his son a large number of famous elephants and very many extremely valuable presents and curiosities, and priceless treasures from the country of Lakhnauti. The son also sent to his father an equal number of Persian horses, and other kinds of valuable articles and cloth goods, and rare and unique presents such that the accountant of imagination is unable to estimate their number and value; and all sorts of delight and pleasure burst upon the Amirs of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn and Nāṣiru-d-Dīn and Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, and upon high and low of the armies, and the Maliks of both parties exchanged visits: Mir Khusrū relates in detail this meeting¹ in the Qirānu-s-Sa'dain, and in another place he writes in a qaṣida:

Hail! to the happy kingdom when two kings are as one.
Hail! to the happy era when two troths are as one.

The Qirānu-s-Sa'dain fixes the meeting between father and son as having taken place at Ajūdhyā on the banks of the Ghāgra.

¹ Ibn Batūta gives a somewhat more fanciful description of this meeting of Nāṣiru-d-Dīn and Mu'izzu-d-Dīn. Paris Edu. 1855, Vol. III. p. 177, see also Elliott III. p. 596.

Behold ! the son is a monarch, the father a Sultān,
Behold the glorious kingdom now that two kings are as one.
'Tis for the sake of kingship and world enslaving power,
That for the world, two world-protecting kings become as one.

One is the Nāṣir of the age, the king Maḥmūd Sultān,
Whose edict in the four parts of the world is still as one.
The other is Mu'izzu-d-Dīn the world's king Kaiqubād,
In whose grasp Irān and Turān are welded into one.

And this is his also—

161. Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dunyā wad Dīn Kaiqubād Shāh Hast thou ever seen one who is the light of the eyes of four kings

On the last day¹ when Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn came to bid farewell in the presence of Malik Nizāmu-l-Mulk and Qiwāmu-l-Mulk, who were both of them counsellors and closely bound up with the Government, he gave Mu'izzu-d-Dīn many good pieces of useful advice on all subjects, with exhortation, and examples and instances, and first of all warned him against excess in wine and venery, then spoke of his carelessness with regard to state matters, and rebuked him severely for killing his brother Kai Khusrū and the other noted Amīrs and Maliks of the adherents of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn; then he exhorted him to be continually given to prayer and to perform the fast of Ramazān, and to keep all the principal tenets of the Musulmān religion, and taught him certain fixed rules and essential regulations of sovereignty. At the time of taking his departure he whispered in a low tone telling him to get rid of Nizāmu-l-Mulk 'Alāqa as soon as possible, "for" said he "if he gets a chance at you it is small chance you will get" this much he said, and they bid one another farewell with great emotion, and Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn for a few days remembered his father's injunctions, and gave up his vicious pleasures, but when he had travelled a few stages the merry courtesans and all kinds of enticing musicians and enchanting jugglers, subverters of piety, skilled and clever, crowded round him on all sides, and enticed his feet from the firm path of fortitude and self-restraint, by all sorts of gallantries and coquetries, and sense-ravishing gestures and allurements.

The bitter parting advice of his father did not find place in his heart

For this reason that his heart was inclined to sweets of pleasure.

And the elephant saw Hindustān¹ in its dreams and he broke through his forced repentance, which was as filmy as the web of a spider, at the first provocation, and used to say, "Which advice?² and what counsel?" 162

I will not give up the delights of to-day for tomorrow
Let tomorrow bring what it may, say to it "Bring it."

In opposition to this view is the following,

It befits not a king to be drunken with wine
Nor become entangled in lust and desire;
The king should be always the guardian of his people,
It is a sin that a guardian should be drunken.
When the shepherd becomes full of new wine
The flock sleeps in the belly of the wolf.

Heavy cups of wine used he to drink from the hands of the light-living cup bearers, and used to snatch a portion from his short ephemeral existence, and in this state malicious time used to foretell this calamity,³

Oh thou whose reign is the reign of faithless friends
From thy love springs hate, from thy honour disgrace,
Thou art as full of turmoil, but as empty, as the drum;
Lasting for one night like the candle, and for one day like the rose.

In this licentious mode of life he made his way to Dihli where he arrived in the year 689 H. (1290 A.D.). There certain of his notable Amirs became suspicious of his intentions, and withdrew

Sher Khān¹ who was one of their number repented and returned, and was thrown into a prison which he only left to go to the prison house of the grave, the others were punished. They bestowed upon Fīroz Khān ibn Yaghrash the Khiljī, who eventually obtained the title of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn, the title of Shāyista Khān,² and entrusted the district of Baran³ to his control; accordingly he formed a plot by which he got Malik Himār Kachhan, who had treacherously attempted to slay him, into his power, and took vengeance on him for the deed which he had failed to accomplish. Then was seen the truth of the proverb "He who digged a pit for his brother is fallen into it himself."

Thou hast digged a pit in the way⁴ that thou mayest overthrow others.

Dost thou not fear lest one day thou should'st find thyself in the midst of it?

This was the plan which Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn carried into effect. He was very anxious to act upon the advice of his father and remove Nizāmu-l-Mulk 'Alāqa, so he in the first instance appointed him to Multān, but Nizāmu-l-Mulk saw through this device, and kept making excuses for delaying his departure, whereupon certain of the king's retainers at a hint from him, poisoned Nizāmu-l-Mulk's cup, and despatched him to the land of non-existence. It so happened that this occurrence became a cause of injury to the State. At this same time the Sultān was attacked by paralysis⁵ from his excesses in wine and venery, in addition to which other deadly ills and chronic diseases obtained the mastery over his body, and his constitution not being able to stand against them, his powers succumbed. The greater number of the Amirs and Maliks who were well disposed to him raised his son

In the year 688 H. (1289 A.D.) they made terms with Shāyista Khān who had distanced all his rivals.² Accordingly he ordered all his kinsmen and retainers whom he had summoned from Baran,³ and had stationed fully armed and equipped in readiness on the other side of the river, to cross the river Jumna and prepare to contest the day with their enemies. Certain of the Amīrs of the party of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn and Mu'izzu-d-Dīn came out to oppose him with elephants and a large gathering, and having placed a royal umbrella over the head of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, who was reduced to a shadow by weakness and emaciation, displayed him from afar off from the summit of the palace of Kīlūgharī where he was but barely visible, and made obeisance to him.⁴ In the meantime Malik Chhajū, brother's son to Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn, who had acquired the title of Kishlī Khān cried out "I wish to place Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn upon a boat and take him to his father at Lakhnauti and remain myself in the service of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Kai Kāūs"—In spite of this the people of Dihlī, from the highest to the lowest, came to the assistance of Shamsu-d-Dīn, and having assembled in front of the Budāon gate stood up⁵ to oppose Shāyista Khān in battle, and since the sons of Maliku-l-Umarā Fakhru-d-Dīn Kotwāl had been taken prisoners in the fight with Shāyista Khān, and Malik Himār Surkha, who had plotted with the servants of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn to kill Shāyista Khān and carry off Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn (Kai Kāūs),⁶ had fallen by the hand of Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn son of Shāyista Khān; accordingly Maliku-l-Umarā (Fakhru-d-Dīn) opposed the people and prevented their assembling as they desired, till at last the adherents of Shāyista Khān removed Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Kai Kāūs from the throne by force and carried him off to Bahāpūr,⁷ where Shāyista

This occurrence took place in the middle ² of the month of Muḥarram in the year 689 H. (1209 A.D.).³ The duration of the sovereignty of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn was three years and some months.

At one time it feeds you with kindness at another poisons

This is an example of the custom of the revolving heaven.

We learn from the *Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī*⁴ that Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, after the capture of the Shāhzāda, was seized while sitting in durbar during that revolt of the populace, and was bound, and died in captivity of hunger and thirst: in the course of his sufferings he wrote this quatrain, plain.

The hand of my generosity has fallen between the hammer and the anvil.
My eye which used to see the gold of the mine and the invisible jewel
To-day alas! is blinded for lack of bread.

And when the tumult between Itimar Surkha and the people of Dihlī subsided, and Shāyista Khān had gained his heart's desire and seated the prince upon the throne, and had set the affairs of the kingdom going again, on the second day after this, Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn bade farewell to this transitory ⁵ unstable

SULTĀN SHĀMSU-D-DĪN KAI KĀŪS.

The son of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Kaiqubād nominally ascended the throne¹ in Bahāpūr in the year already mentioned, by the co-operation of Shāyista Khān and Malik Chhajū; and the uncle of Shāyista Khān, named Malik Husain, who had kept quiet at Kīlūgharī during the disturbances, for the safe custody of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, had established great confidence. Shāyista Khān made Malik Chhajū Kishlī Khān undertake the duties of Regent, and handing over the young prince to his charge, made a request on his own behalf for the districts of Tiberhinda, Debālpur, and Multān, and asked permission to depart thither; Malik yielding up the Regency and Vazīrship to Shāyista Khān² asked for the district of Karra for himself. Shāyista Khān immediately acceded to his request, and conferred on him a robe of honour, and some days later allowed him to proceed to Karra, and Maliku-l-Umarā Fakhrud-Dīn Kotwāl having congratulated Shāyista Khān on his accession to such high office and great prosperity was instrumental in obtaining permission for Malik Chhajū to leave.

166.

Shāyista Khān used to bring the prince into the durbār hall and used himself to give audience and to regulate the important affairs of state. After a month or two, he brought Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn on horseback to the palace of Kīlūgharī, and imprisoned him, and giving him as his fellows the inhabitants of the prison-house of the grave, sent him to the secret abode of destruction.

SULTĀN JALĀLU-D-DĪN IBN YAGHRASH KHILJĪ

167. Whose name was Malik Fīroz and his title Shāyista Khān, came to the throne in the year 689 H. as has already been said, with the consent and assistance of Malik Chhajū Kishlī Khān; and inasmuch he had previously been regent and governor of the kingdom² the affairs (of state) all devolved upon him.

It must not be forgotten that although Shihābu-d-Dīn Ḥakīm Kirmānī Jaunpurī,³ the author of the history called Tabaqāt-i-Mahmūd Shāhī, deduces the pedigree of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn and Sultān Mahmūd Mālwi from the stock of Qālīj Khān, son-in-law of Changiz Khān, there is a long story connected with this. This at least is clear that this ancestry has no real authority, any one of sound judgment will be able to detect the falsity of his claim to this descent; and as a matter of fact there is no connection whatever between Qālīj and Khalj, in spite of the fact that Qālīj has too rough a sound for the Turki tongue, and if it had any equivalent (of sufficient softness) it would be Qalj⁴ with the meaning of a sword and in some histories it is said that Khalj is the name of one of the sons of Yāfiṣ, (Japhet) the son of Nūḥ (Noah) on whom be peace and that the Khiljīs descend from him. God knows the truth of this. To make a long story short, Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn divided the greater portion of the valuable appointments between his sons and brothers, and bestowed the following titles—upon his eldest son the title of Khān Khānān, upon his second son that of Arkali Khān, and on his youngest son that of Qadr Khān, while he gave to his uncle Malik Husain the title of Tāju-l-Mulk. In this same way he bestowed various titles upon others, and allotted them estates, and having built a new town, and a new garden on the banks of the Jumna opposite to the Mu'izzī palace he called it a citadel, "The Rocky Citadel"; when it was completed it was called "Shahr-i-nau" (New-town)¹ and in Sha'bān, of the second year after his accession, Malik Chhajū Kishli Khān went to Karra, and became openly rebellious. The Amīrs of the party of Ghīyāṣu-d-Dīn who held estates in that district joined with him, came to Budāon and crossed the Ganges by the ford of Bijlāna with the intention of attacking Dihlī, waiting for the arrival of Malik Chhajū who was to come by way of Karra,² (and)³ Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn left Khān Khānān in Dihlī and marched against them. Dividing his forces into two army corps he himself went by way of Kol, and reached Budāon,⁴ sending Arkali Khān towards Amroha to oppose Malik Chhajū. Arkali Khān fought the enemy valiantly in many engagements during several days on the banks of the Rahab. In the meantime the people of Bairām Dev the Raja of Kola, which was also called Koela, gave information to Malik Chhajū that Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn was in pursuit of him, and having frightened him exceedingly, urged him to take to flight. He was in such dread of the Sultān, that he did not know his head from his heels, and in the dead of night he made his escape, but eventually fell into the hands of the Kuwārs.⁵ Arkali Khān crossed the Rahab,⁶ despatched Bairām

¹ Neither Barnī nor Firishta reckon Kaikāūs (or Kaïumours) as having had an independent reign, and inasmuch as he was only an infant of some three years of age, it seems more rational to allude to him merely as the puppet that he really was. The only object in raising him to the throne was an attempt to save the kingdom from passing into the hands of the Khiljīs. Jalālu-d-Dīn Khiljī, who had been appointed Vizīr when Nizāmu-l-Mulk had been poisoned, was ready to seize upon the throne. The fief of Baran had been conferred upon him with the title of Shāyista Khān, subsequently he was made 'Āriz-i-Mamālik. The plots he contrived to get rid of Kaïqubād have been detailed above.

Then he went in the direction of Bahārī and Kasam Kūr, which is the same as Shamsābād,¹ and when they took Malik Chhajū and the other captive Balbanī Amīrs in fetters and chains² into the presence of the Sultān, he called to mind their old ties of relationship, and loosed them from their bonds, sent them to the baths, clothed them in rich garments of honour, and made them partake of his own table, sending Malik Chhajū with the greatest marks of respect to Multān.

In the meanwhile, the summons which is distasteful to all reached Khān-i-Khānān. The Sultān was greatly distressed at his loss. Mīr Khusrū wrote the following dirge in memory of him :—

What day is this that I see not the sun shining,
 If night has come why do I not see the brilliant moon.
 Since two days my sun has remained behind the clouds,
 So that in my eyes I see nothing but clouds and rain.

 He replied, What could I do with sight, since I cannot see Mahmūd Sultān!

And in the year following, Arkalī Khān came from Multān to Dihlī, and the Sultān leaving him in Dihlī proceeded to Mandāwar, and after his arrival at that stage, having received with anxiety tidings of the revolt of certain of the Ghiyāṣī Amirs, he made over the district of Budāon to Malik Maghlatī,¹ sent him off at once and appointed Malik Mubārak to Tiberhindah, then after reducing the fortress of Mandāwar proceeded by an uninterrupted series of marches to Dihlī; and in those days a certain Saiyyid ascetic and recluse, holding close communion with God,² relying upon Him, bountiful,³ adorned with so many excellencies and perfections, Sidi Maulā⁴ by name first came from 'Ajam (Persia) to Ajūdhan in the service of the pillar of the Saints the master Shaikh Farīd, Ganj-i-Shakkar, may God sanctify his resting place, and sought permission to proceed to the eastern parts of Hindustān. They said to him "Beware of crowds of men, and abstain from intercourse with kings." When he reached Dihlī, Khān-i-Khānān, the eldest son of the Sultān, displayed the greatest desire to become his disciple.⁵ In the same way the greater number of the deposed Maliks and Amirs of the Balban party⁶ used daily both morning and evening to sit at the table of that darvesh, who would not accept anything from any one. People used to credit him with alchemistic powers, and used to come in such crowds that a thousand mans of fine flour and five hundred mans of freshly skinned meat, and three hundred mans of sugar used to be the daily expenditure of the Shaikh which he expended in alms ; the aforesaid Sidi although he engaged always in vigils¹ and the prayers of the five stated times, was, however, never present at the public prayer on Fridays, nor was he bound by the conditions of public² worship in accordance with established custom, and Qāzī Jalālu-d-Dīn Kāshānī (and)³ Qāzī Urdū and men of note, and trusted chiefs, and all both great and small, used continually to worship at his monastery.

When this news reached the Sultān, the story goes that one night he went in disguise to his monastery, and saw for himself that he expended even more than was reported. Accordingly the next day he held a grand durbār and ordered Sidi Maulā with the Qāzī and the other Amīrs who were his disciples, to be brought before him with ignominious treatment of all kinds, bound in fetters and chains. He enquired into the state of the case, and asked each one whether the Sidi laid claim to kingly power. The aforesaid Sidi denied it, and fortified his denial with an oath, but to no purpose. At that time Qāzī Jalālu-d-Dīn lay under the Sultān's displeasure, he also denied the allegation. The Sultān deposed him, and nominated him as Qāzī of Budāon. In order to verify the claims to Saiyyidship, and to test the miraculous powers of the Sidi, he had a huge fire like that prepared by Nimrūd (for Abraham) lighted, and wished to have Sidi Maulā thrown into that temple of fire. The Ulamā of the time, in consideration of the irreligious nature of that order, issued a mandamus which they communicated to the Sultān saying, "The essential nature of fire is to consume things, and no one can issue forth from it in safety unhurt." The Sultān accordingly desisted and gave up that ordeal, but he punished the larger number of those Maliks in that same assembly, and some he expatriated ; and inasmuch as the answers of Sidi Maulā⁴ were all in accordance with reason, and no fault could be found with him either on the score of religious law or logic, the Sultān was reduced to extremity, and suddenly turning to Abū Bakr Tūsi Ḥaidarī who was the chief of the sect of Qalandars, and utterly unscrupulous, he said "Why do not you darveshes¹ avenge me of this tyrant," there-upon a Qalandar leapt up from their midst, and struck the unfortunate Sidi several blows with a razor and wounded him, then they shaved off the holy man's whiskers¹ with a knife even to the chin, and stabbed him in the side² with sackmakers' needles, and then, by command of Arkali Khān, the second son of the Sultān, an elephant driver drove a rogue elephant over the head of the poor oppressed Sidi, and martyred him with countless tortures may God be gracious to him. They say that this same Sidi, for a whole month before this occurrence used to sing these verses at all times, smiling the while he sang:

In the kitchen of love, they slay naught but the good :
The weak natured, and evil disposed they kill not.
If thou art a sincere lover, flee not from slaughter,
He whom they slay not is no better than a corpse.

And just at this time, on the very day of his murder, a whirlwind black with dust arose, and the world was darkened; there was a scarcity of rain in that year, and such a famine occurred that the Hindūs, from excess of hunger and want, went in bands and joining their hands threw themselves into the river Jumna, and became the portion of the alligator of extinction. Many Muslims also, burning in the flames of hunger, were drowned in the ocean of non-existence, while the rest of the world took these signs and events as proofs of the verity of Sidi and as evidence of his sincerity. Although no inferences can be drawn from facts of this kind, since they may finally prove to be only coincidences, still I myself have seen with my own eyes examples of such incidents, as shall be related in their proper places if God so will it.

The remainder of the accused, at the intercession of Arkali Khān, were delivered from the danger which threatened their lives, and from the punishment intended by the Sultān; and in this same year the Sultān for the second time marched against

Rantanbhor, and destroyed the country round it, and overthrew the idols and idol-temples, but returned without attempting to reduce the fort. Arkalī Khān went to Multān without his permission, at which the Sultān was very vexed.

173. In the year 691 H. the Mughuls under Chingīz Khān came up against Hindustān with a very large army, and fought a very severe battle with the Sultān's victorious forces in the neighbourhood of Sanām. When the Mughuls became aware of the size of the army of Hindustān they began to make overtures for peace. The Sultān thereupon summoned their leader, who was very closely related to Halākū Khān, and also his son, who called the Sultān his father. They accordingly had an interview and exchanged gifts and presents and each returned to his own country: and Alghū¹ the grandson of Chingīz Khān, embraced Islām, and several thousand Mughuls besides followed his example and having learnt to repeat the sacred and blessed formula, elected to remain in the service of the Sultān. Alghū was selected for the honour of becoming son-in-law to the Sultān. The Mughuls took up their abode in Ghiyāspūr in which is now the sacred tomb of the Prince of Holy men Nizām al Auliya² may God sanctify his resting place. It is commonly known as Mughulpūr and those Mughuls were called the "new Muslims."

At the close of this same year the Sultān having gone up against the fort of Mandāwar ravaged and pillaged the country round it and then returned. 'Alāu-d-Dīn the Governor of Karra, obtained permission in that year to proceed to Bhilsa³ and attacked that country⁴ and brought much booty thence to present to the Sultān, and the idol which was the object of worship of the Hindūs, he caused to be cast down in front of the gate of Badāon to be trampled upon by the people.⁵ These services of 'Alāu-d-Dīn being highly approved,⁶ the jāgīr of Oudh also was added to his other estates; and since 'Alāu-d-Dīn was very angry and incensed against the Sultān's consort, who was his mother-in-law, and against the daughter of the Sultān, because she always made a practice of speaking ill of him to her father, he was anxious, on any pretext whatever, to leave the Sultān's dominions and go to a distance, and find some place of refuge for himself; accordingly he provided himself with new servants, and making all preparations as to personal clothing and furniture, he asked the Sultān¹ to bestow upon him the district of Chanderī, and leaving Dihlī came to Karra, and from there under the pretence of attacking Chanderī, he went by way of Illichpūr, and made for the frontiers of the country of Deogīr; leaving Malik 'Alāu-l-Mulk who was one of his friends, as his deputy in Karra, and having instructed him to temporise with the Sultān, went off somewhere unknown to anyone, and when no news could be obtained of Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn's whereabouts for a considerable time, the Sultān was exceedingly sorry.² Suddenly news arrived that 'Alāu-d-Dīn having gone up against the rebel Deo Gir, had conquered the whole of his country as far as the confines of the country of the Deccan, and had taken as spoil much treasure, and elephants and property, several thousands of horses, together with valuables; silk and cloth goods, and jewels, beyond the limits of computation, and that he was making for Karra. This was a source of great gratification to the Sultān, but the wise men of those times knew very well, both from analogy and inference, that 'Alāu-d-Dīn³ had gone to that country without permission from the Sultān, and had suffered much annoyance at the hands of Malika-i-Jahān who was the consort of the Sultān, and also from his own wife, and had accordingly faced the world, always nursing in his breast sinister intentions. Now⁴ that he was in a position perfectly to put his rebellious ideas into execution, and had not the access to the Court, it was strange that the Sultān seemed to suffer no apprehension as regarded him; but no one dared represent these views to the Sultān, who was wholly and entirely ignorant of the annoyance which 'Alāu-d-Dīn had suffered at the hands of the Queen-mother and his own wife, and if by chance they ventured to speak¹ of the possibility of the revolt and treachery of 'Alāu-d-Dīn, the Sultān attributed it to jealousy, and would never allow the idea of his contumacy or rebellion to enter his head.

175. In short, at the time when the Sultān was in the neighbourhood of Gwālīār he summoned a council of his Amīrs to deliberate about 'Alāu-d-Dīn and said.² "What in your opinion is 'Alāu-d-Dīn's object in coming hither with so great display and circumstance, what will he do and what ought I to do? shall I go to meet him by way of Chanderī or shall I remain where I am, or again shall I return to Dihlī?" Malik Aḥmad Chap who was a Vazīr of sound judgment and ripe experience and loyal to the backbone, did all he could to warn the Sultān by adducing logical arguments and quoting precedents, reminding him of the revolt of Malik Chhajū and the mutiny of the inhabitants of Kara, events which were of recent occurrence, as testifying to the probabilities of the present position, and urged him to go out to meet 'Alāu-d-Dīn on the way by which he would arrive, and to put an end to his ostentatious display and pompous arrogance, to seize his elephants and property, and all the things which were likely to be of use; but the Sultān would not listen to his advice, and launching forth into extravagant eulogy of 'Alāu-d-Dīn declared that his mind was perfectly at ease on his account in every possible way, "for is he not" (said he) "my protégé³ and foster child, he can never harbour any evil designs against me." Malik Fakhrū-d-Dīn, and the other Amīrs also went with oily speeches to the Sultān, and brought forward all sorts of absurd arguments simply to suit the humour of the Sultān, and adducing weak examples induced him to return to Dihlī; Malik Aḥmad Chap rose up in wrath from that assembly, and spoke as follows: "If Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn with all this⁴ pomp and royal display has arrived at Kara and crossing the river Sarū makes for Lakhnautī, I do not know what can be done by any one to oppose him," and lamenting exceedingly the condition of the Sultān he repeated the following lines—

The Sultān then came from Gwāliār to Dihlī, and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having reached Karra¹ wrote despatches full of craft and cunning to the Court, and worked upon the avarice of the Sultān by presents of elephants and endless wealth, and begged for a kindly worded letter summoning him to the Court, while all the time he was engaged in preparations to start for Lakhnautī, and having sent his brother² Zafar Khān to Oudh ordered him to hold in readiness all the boats on the river Sarū. The simple minded Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn wrote a command with his own hand in accordance with 'Alāu-d-Dīn's request and sent it³ by the hand of two confidential and trusted body servants, one of whom was named Imādu-l-Mulk and the other⁴ Zīāu-d-Dīn. These men when they arrived soon perceived by his manner and bearing⁵ that the face of affairs was altered⁶ and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having prepared the dish for the Sultān, and having arranged for its service at a given signal, handed over⁷ those two messengers to sentries who were charged to keep them so closely guarded that not even a bird should be able to flap its wings near them, then he wrote a letter to Ilmās Beg his brother, who was also a son-in-law of the Sultān,⁸ and sent it to Dihlī, couched in these words: "Inasmuch as in the course of this expedition, I have committed many unwarranted acts, in that without taking the orders of the Sultān I proceeded to Deogīr, for this reason certain persons have aroused fear in my heart and anxiety—but seeing that I am the loyal servant and son of the Sultān, if he will march lightly equipped and by rapid marches come and lay hands upon me, and carry me off I have nothing to urge against

When Ilmās Beg laid that ¹ letter before the Sultān, he on the instant sent ² Ilmās Beg to reassure 'Alāu-d-Dīn and gave him a promise that he himself would follow. Ilmās Beg embarked in a boat, and going like the wind over the surface of the water, ³ on the seventh day joined Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and urged him to proceed to Lakhnauti, ⁴ but certain of the wise and far-seeing companions of 'Alāu-d-Dīn said, "What need have we to go to Lakhnauti when the Sultān by reason of his excessive greed for the wealth of Deogir, and the elephants and horses of that country will come here lightly equipped ⁵ in the very height of the rainy season. ⁶ At that time we will take any steps that may be necessary, ⁷ and whatever has to be done to meet the emergency, we have it all stored up and we will put an end to him on the spot." ⁸ Since the cup of the life of Sultān Jalālū-d-Dīn was full ⁹ and his heart was brim full of lust and greed for that fancied and ill-omened treasure, ¹⁰ and Fate too had rendered him deaf and blind, not one of these evil designs was perceived by him :

In opposition to this view is the following,

Nor become entangled in lust and desire;
The king should be always the guardian of his people,
It is a sin that a guardian should be drunken.

Sher Khān¹ who was one of their number repented and returned, and was thrown into a prison which he only left to go to the prison house of the grave, the others were punished. They bestowed upon Fīroz Khān ibn Yaghrash the Khiljī, who eventually obtained the title of Sultān Jalāl-u-d-Dīn, the title of Shāyista Khān,² and entrusted the district of Baran³ to his control; accordingly he formed a plot by which he got Malik Himār Kachhan, who had treacherously attempted to slay him, into his power, and took vengeance on him for the deed which he had failed to accomplish. Then was seen the truth of the proverb "He who digged a pit for his brother is fallen into it himself."

Thou hast digged a pit in the way⁴ that thou mayest overthrow others.

Dost thou not fear lest one day thou should'st find thyself in the midst of it?

This was the plan which Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn carried into effect. He was very anxious to act upon the advice of his father and remove Nizāmu-l-Mulk 'Alāqa, so he in the first instance appointed him to Multān, but Nizāmu-l-Mulk saw through this device, and kept making excuses for delaying his departure, whereupon certain of the king's retainers at a hint from him, poisoned Nizāmu-l-Mulk's cup, and despatched him to the land of non-existence. It so happened that this occurrence became a cause of injury to the State. At this same time the Sultān was attacked by paralysis⁵ from his excesses in wine and venery, in addition to which other deadly ills and chronic diseases obtained the mastery over his body, and his constitution not being able to stand against them, his powers succumbed. The greater number of the Amīrs and Maliks who were well disposed to him raised his son

In the year 688 H. (1289 A.D.) they made terms with Shāyista Khān who had distanced all his rivals.² Accordingly he ordered all his kinsmen and retainers whom he had summoned from Baran,³ and had stationed fully armed and equipped in readiness on the other side of the river, to cross the river Jumna and prepare to contest the day with their enemies. Certain of the Amīrs of the party of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn and Mu'izzu-d-Dīn came out to oppose him with elephants and a large gathering, and having placed a royal umbrella over the head of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, who was reduced to a shadow by weakness and emaciation, displayed him from afar off from the summit of the palace of Kīlūgharī where he was but barely visible, and made obeisance to him.⁴ In the meantime Malik Chhajū, brother's son to Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn, who had acquired the title of Kishlī Khān cried out "I wish to place Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn upon a boat and take him to his father at Lakhnauti and remain myself in the service of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Kai Kāūs"—In spite of this the people of Dihlī, from the highest to the lowest, came to the assistance of Shamsu-d-Dīn, and having assembled in front of the Budāon gate stood up⁵ to oppose Shāyista Khān in battle, and since the sons of Maliku-l-Umarā Fakhru-d-Dīn Kotwāl had been taken prisoners in the fight with Shāyista Khān, and Malik Himār Surkha, who had plotted with the servants of Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn to kill Shāyista Khān and carry off Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn (Kai Kāūs),⁶ had fallen by the hand of Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn son of Shāyista Khān; accordingly Maliku-l-Umarā (Fakhru-d-Dīn) opposed the people and prevented their assembling as they desired, till at last the adherents of Shāyista Khān removed Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Kai Kāūs from the throne by force and carried him off to Bahāpūr,⁷ where Shāyista

SULTĀN SHAMSU-D-DĪN KAI KĀŪS.

The son of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Kaiqubād nominally ascended the throne¹ in Bahāpūr in the year already mentioned, by the co-operation of Shāyista Khān and Malik Chhajū; and the uncle of Shāyista Khān, named Malik Husain, who had kept quiet at Kīlūghari during the disturbances, for the safe custody of Sultān Mu'izzu-d-Dīn, had established great confidence. Shāyista Khān made Malik Chhajū Kishli Khān undertake the duties of Regent, and handing over the young prince to his charge, made a request on his own behalf for the districts of Tiberhinda, Debālpur, and Multān, and asked permission to depart thither; Malik yielding up the Regency and Vazīrship to Shāyista Khān² asked for the district of Karra for himself. Shāyista Khān immediately acceded to his request, and conferred on him a robe of honour, and some days later allowed him to proceed to Karra, and Maliku-l-Umarā Fakhru-d-Dīn Kotwāl having congratulated Shāyista Khān on his accession to such high office and great prosperity was instrumental in obtaining permission for Malik Chhajū to leave.

166.

Shāyista Khān used to bring the prince into the durbār hall and used himself to give audience and to regulate the important affairs of state. After a month or two, he brought Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn on horseback to the palace of Kīlūghari, and imprisoned him, and giving him as his fellows the inhabitants of the prison-house of the grave, sent him to the secret abode of destruction.

SULTĀN JALĀLU-D-DĪN IBN YAGHRASH KHILJĪ

167. Whose name was Malik Fīroz and his title Shāyista Khān, came to the throne in the year 689 H. as has already been said, with the consent and assistance of Malik Chihajū Kishli Khān; and inasmuch he had previously been regent and governor of the kingdom² the affairs (of state) all devolved upon him.

It must not be forgotten that although Shihābu-d-Dīn Ḥakīm Kirmānī Jaunpurī,³ the author of the history called Tabaqāt-i-Mahmūd Shāhī, deduces the pedigree of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn and Sultān Mahmūd Mālwi from the stock of Qālīj Khān, son-in-law of Changīz Khān, there is a long story connected with this. This at least is clear that this ancestry has no real authority, any one of sound judgment will be able to detect the falsity of his claim to this descent; and as a matter of fact there is no connection whatever between Qālīj and Khālīj, in spite of the fact that Qālīj has too rough a sound for the Turki tongue, and if it had any equivalent (of sufficient softness) it would be Qalīj⁴ with the meaning of a sword and in some histories it is said that Khalj is the name of one of the sons of Yāfiṣ, (Japhet) the son of Nūḥ (Noah) on whom be peace and that the Khiljīs descend from him. God knows the truth of this. To make a long story short, Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn divided the greater portion of the valuable appointments between his sons and brothers, and bestowed the following titles—upon his eldest son the title of Khān Khānān, upon his second son that of Arkālī Khān, and on his youngest son that of Qadr Khān, while he gave to his uncle Malik Ḥusain the title of Tāju-l-Mulk. In this same way he bestowed various titles upon others, and allotted them estates, and having built a new town, and a new garden on the banks of the Jumna opposite to the Mu'izzī palace he called it a citadel, "The Rocky Citadel"; when it was completed it was called "Shahr-i-nau" (New-town)¹ and in Sha'bān, of the second year after his accession, Malik Chhajū Kishlī Khān went to Karra, and became openly rebellious. The Amirs of the party of Ghiyāṣu-d-Dīn who held estates in that district joined with him, came to Budāon and crossed the Ganges by the ford of Bijlāna with the intention of attacking Dihlī, waiting for the arrival of Malik Chhajū who was to come by way of Karra,² (and)³ Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn left Khān Khānān in Dihlī and marched against them. Dividing his forces into two army corps he himself went by way of Kol, and reached Budāon,⁴ sending Arkālī Khān towards Amroha to oppose Malik Chhajū. Arkālī Khān fought the enemy valiantly in many engagements during several days on the banks of the Rahab. In the meantime the people of Bairām Dev the Raja of Kola, which was also called Koela, gave information to Malik Chhajū that Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn was in pursuit of him, and having frightened him exceedingly, urged him to take to flight. He was in such dread of the Sultān, that he did not know his head from his heels, and in the dead of night he made his escape, but eventually fell into the hands of the Kuwārs.⁵ Arkālī Khān crossed the Rahab,⁶ despatched Bairām

Dev to hell, and pursued Malik Chhajū, and took him prisoner together with some of the other Amīrs of the Ghiyāsi faction. Then he went in the direction of Bahārī and Kasam Kūr, which is the same as Shamsābād,¹ and when they took Malik Chhajū and the other captive Balbanī Amīrs in fetters and chains² into the presence of the Sultān, he called to mind their old ties of relationship, and loosed them from their bonds, sent them to the baths, clothed them in rich garments of honour, and made them partake of his own table, sending Malik Chhajū with the greatest marks of respect to Multān.

169. Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn who was the brother's son and son-in-law of the Sultān,³ and had been appointed to the district of Karra, and Ilmās Beg, the brother of 'Alāu-d-Dīn who subsequently became Ulugh Khān⁴ was appointed to the post of Akhor Beg. In the meanwhile, the summons which is distasteful to all reached Khān-i-Khānān. The Sultān was greatly distressed at his loss. Mir Khusrū wrote the following dirge in memory of him :—

What day is this that I see not the sun shining,
If night has come why do I not see the brilliant moon.
Since two days my sun has remained behind the clouds,
So that in my eyes I see nothing but clouds and rain.
In Hindustān an evident danger has appeared,
On every face I see thousands of wrinkles but I do not see the Khāqān.⁵

Lo there is the King, seated on his throne, with his courtiers

And in the year following, Arkalī Khān came from Multān to Dihlī, and the Sultān leaving him in Dihlī proceeded to Mandāwar, and after his arrival at that stage, having received with anxiety tidings of the revolt of certain of the Ghīyāṣī Amīrs, he made over the district of Budāon to Malik Maghlatī,¹ sent him off at once and appointed Malik Mubārak to Tiberhiudāh, then after reducing the fortress of Mandāwar proceeded by an uninterrupted series of marches to Dihlī; and in those days a certain Saiyyid ascetic and recluse, holding close communion with God,² relying upon Him, bountiful,³ adorned with so many excellencies and perfections, Sidi Maulā⁴ by name first came from 'Ajam (Persia) to Ajūdhan in the service of the pillar of the Saints the master Shaikh Farīd, Ganj-i-Shakkar, may God sanctify his resting place, and sought permission to proceed to the eastern parts of Hindustān. They said to him "Beware of crowds of men, and abstain from intercourse with kings." When he reached Dihlī, Khān-i-Khānān, the eldest son of the Sultān, displayed the greatest desire to become his disciple.⁵ In the same way the greater number of the deposed Maliks and Amīrs of the Balban party⁶ used daily both morning and evening to sit at the table of that darvesh, who would not accept anything from any one. People used to credit him with alchemistic powers, and used to come in such crowds that a thousand mans of fine flour and five hundred mans of freshly skinned meat, and three hundred mans of sugar used to be the daily expenditure of the Shaikh which he expended in alms ; the aforesaid Sidi although he engaged always in vigils¹ and the prayers of the five stated times, was, however, never present at the public prayer on Fridays, nor was he bound by the conditions of public² worship in accordance with established custom, and Qāzi Jalālu-d-Dīn Kāshānī (and)³ Qāzi Urdū and men of note, and trusted chiefs, and all both great and small, used continually to worship at his monastery.

171. When this news reached the Sultān, the story goes that one night he went in disguise to his monastery, and saw for himself that he expended even more than was reported. Accordingly the next day he held a grand durbār and ordered Sidi Maulā with the Qāzi and the other Amīrs who were his disciples, to be brought before him with ignominious treatment of all kinds, bound in fetters and chains. He enquired into the state of the case, and asked each one whether the Sidi laid claim to kingly power. The aforesaid Sidi denied it, and fortified his denial with an oath, but to no purpose. At that time Qāzi Jalālu-d-Dīn lay under the Sultān's displeasure, he also denied the allegation. The Sultān deposed him, and nominated him as Qāzi of Budāon. In order to verify the claims to Saiyyidship, and to test the miraculous powers of the Sidi, he had a huge fire like that prepared by Nimrūd (for Abraham) lighted, and wished to have Sidi Maulā thrown into that temple of fire. The Ulama of the time, in consideration of the irreligious nature of that order, issued a mandamus which they communicated to the Sultān saying, "The essential nature of fire is to consume things, and no one can issue forth from it in safety unhurt." The Sultān accordingly desisted and gave up that ordeal, but he punished the larger number of those Maliks in that same assembly, and some he expatriated ; and inasmuch as the answers of Sidi Maulā⁴ were all in accordance with reason, and no fault could be found with him either on the score of religious law or logic, the Sultān was reduced to extremity, and suddenly turning to Abū Bakr Tūsi Haidari who was the chief of the sect of Qalandars, and utterly unscrupulous, he said "Why do not you darveshes avenge me of this tyrant," there-upon a Qalandar leapt up from their midst, and struck the unfortunate Sidi several blows with a razor and wounded him, then they shaved off the holy man's whiskers¹ with a knife even to the chin, and stabbed him in the side² with sackmakers' needles, and then, by command of Arkali Khān, the second son of the Sultān, an elephant driver drove a rogue elephant over the head of the poor oppressed Sidi, and martyred him with countless tortures may God be gracious to him. They say that this same Sidi, for a whole month before this occurrence used to sing these verses at all times, smiling the while he sang:

In the kitchen of love, they slay naught but the good :
The weak natured, and evil disposed they kill not.
If thou art a sincere lover, flee not from slaughter,
He whom they slay not is no better than a corpse.

And just at this time, on the very day of his murder, a whirlwind black with dust arose, and the world was darkened; there was a scarcity of rain in that year, and such a famine occurred that the Hindūs, from excess of hunger and want, went in bands and joining their hands threw themselves into the river Jumna, and became the portion of the alligator of extinction. Many Muslims also, burning in the flames of hunger, were drowned in the ocean of non-existence, while the rest of the world took these signs and events as proofs of the verity of Sidi and as evidence of his sincerity. Although no inferences can be drawn from facts of this kind, since they may finally prove to be only coincidences, still I myself have seen with my own eyes examples of such incidents, as shall be related in their proper places if God so will it.

The remainder of the accused, at the intercession of Arkali Khān, were delivered from the danger which threatened their lives, and from the punishment intended by the Sultān; and in this same year the Sultān for the second time marched against

Rantanbhor, and destroyed the country round it, and overthrew the idols and idol-temples, but returned without attempting to reduce the fort. Arkalī Khān went to Multān without his permission, at which the Sultān was very vexed.

173. In the year 691 H. the Mughuls under Chingiz Khān came up against Hindustān with a very large army, and fought a very severe battle with the Sultān's victorious forces in the neighbourhood of Sanām. When the Mughuls became aware of the size of the army of Hindustān they began to make overtures for peace. The Sultān thereupon summoned their leader, who was very closely related to Halākū Khān, and also his son, who called the Sultān his father. They accordingly had an interview and exchanged gifts and presents and each returned to his own country: and Alghū¹ the grandson of Chingiz Khān, embraced Islām, and several thousand Mughuls besides followed his example and having learnt to repeat the sacred and blessed formula, elected to remain in the service of the Sultān. Alghū was selected for the honour of becoming son-in-law to the Sultān. The Mughuls took up their abode in Ghiyāspūr in which is now the sacred tomb of the Prince of Holy men Nizāmūl Auliya² may God sanctify his resting place. It is commonly known as Mughulpūr and those Mughuls were called the "new Muslims."

At the close of this same year the Sultān having gone up against the fort of Mandāwar ravaged and pillaged the country round it and then returned. 'Alāu-d-Dīn the Governor of Karra, obtained permission in that year to proceed to Bhilsa³ and attacked that country⁴ and brought much booty thence to present to the Sultān, and the idol which was the object of worship of the Hindūs, he caused to be cast down in front of the gate of Badāon to be trampled upon by the people.⁵ These services of 'Alāu-d-Dīn being highly approved,⁶ the jāgīr of Oudh also was added to his other estates; and since 'Alāu-d-Dīn was very angry and incensed against the Sultān's consort, who was his mother-in-law, and against the daughter of the Sultān, because she always made a practice of speaking ill of him to her father, he was anxious, on any pretext whatever, to leave the Sultān's dominions and go to a distance, and find some place of refuge for himself; accordingly he provided himself with new servants, and making all preparations as to personal clothing and furniture, he asked the Sultān¹ to bestow upon him the district of Chanderī, and leaving Dihlī came to Karra, and from there under the pretence of attacking Chanderī, he went by way of Illichpūr, and made for the frontiers of the country of Deogīr; leaving Malik 'Alāu-l-Mulk who was one of his friends, as his deputy in Karra, and having instructed him to temporise with the Sultān, went off somewhere unknown to anyone, and when no news could be obtained of Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn's whereabouts for a considerable time, the Sultān was exceedingly sorry.² Suddenly news arrived that 'Alāu-d-Dīn having gone up against the rebel Deo Gir, had conquered the whole of his country as far as the confines of the country of the Deccan, and had taken as spoil much treasure, and elephants and property, several thousands of horses, together with valuables; silk and cloth goods, and jewels, beyond the limits of computation, and that he was making for Karra. This was a source of great gratification to the Sultān, but the wise men of those times knew very well, both from analogy and inference, that 'Alāu-d-Dīn³ had gone to that country without permission from the Sultān, and had suffered much annoyance at the hands of Malika-i-Jahān who was the consort of the Sultān, and also from his own wife, and had accordingly faced the world, always nursing in his breast sinister intentions. Now⁴ that he was in a position perfectly to put his rebellious ideas into execution, and had not the access to the Court, it was strange that the Sultān seemed to suffer no apprehension as regarded him; but no one dared represent these views to the Sultān, who was wholly and entirely ignorant of the annoyance which 'Alāu-d-Dīn had suffered at the hands of the Queen-mother and his own wife, and if by chance they ventured to speak¹ of the possibility of the revolt and treachery of 'Alāu-d-Dīn, the Sultān attributed it to jealousy, and would never allow the idea of his contumacy or rebellion to enter his head.

175. In short, at the time when the Sultān was in the neighbourhood of Gwālīār he summoned a council of his Amīrs to deliberate about 'Alāu-d-Dīn and said.² "What in your opinion is 'Alāu-d-Dīn's object in coming hither with so great display and circumstance, what will he do and what ought I to do? shall I go to meet him by way of Chanderī or shall I remain where I am, or again shall I return to Dihlī?" Malik Aḥmad Chap who was a Vazīr of sound judgment and ripe experience and loyal to the backbone, did all he could to warn the Sultān by adducing logical arguments and quoting precedents, reminding him of the revolt of Malik Chhajū and the mutiny of the inhabitants of Kaṛṛa, events which were of recent occurrence, as testifying to the probabilities of the present position, and urged him to go out to meet 'Alāu-d-Dīn on the way by which he would arrive, and to put an end to his ostentatious display and pompous arrogance, to seize his elephants and property, and all the things which were likely to be of use; but the Sultān would not listen to his advice, and launching forth into extravagant eulogy of 'Alāu-d-Dīn declared that his mind was perfectly at ease on his account in every possible way, "for is he not" (said he) "my protégé³ and foster child, he can never harbour any evil designs against me." Malik Fakhru-d-Dīn, and the other Amīrs also went with oily speeches to the Sultān, and brought forward all sorts of absurd arguments simply to suit the humour of the Sultān, and adducing weak examples induced him to return to Dihlī; Malik Aḥmad Chap rose up in wrath from that assembly, and spoke as follows: "If Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn with all this⁴ pomp and royal display has arrived at Kaṛṛa and crossing the river Sarū makes for Lakhnautī, I do not know what can be done by any one to oppose him," and lamenting exceedingly the condition of the Sultān he repeated the following lines—

The Sultān then came from Gwāliār to Dihlī, and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having reached Karra¹ wrote despatches full of craft and cunning to the Court, and worked upon the avarice of the Sultān by presents of elephants and endless wealth, and begged for a kindly worded letter summoning him to the Court, while all the time he was engaged in preparations to start for Lakhnautī, and having sent his brother² Zafar Khān to Oudh ordered him to hold in readiness all the boats on the river Sarū. The simple minded Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn wrote a command with his own hand in accordance with 'Alāu-d-Dīn's request and sent it³ by the hand of two confidential and trusted body servants, one of whom was named Imādu-l-Mulk and the other⁴ Zīāu-d-Dīn. These men when they arrived soon perceived by his manner and bearing⁵ that the face of affairs was altered⁶ and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having prepared the dish for the Sultān, and having arranged for its service at a given signal, handed over⁷ those two messengers to sentries who were charged to keep them so closely guarded that not even a bird should be able to flap its wings near them, then he wrote a letter to Ilmās Beg his brother, who was also a son-in-law of the Sultān,⁸ and sent it to Dihlī, couched in these words: "Inasmuch as in the course of this expedition, I have committed many unwarranted acts, in that without taking the orders of the Sultān I proceeded to Deogīr, for this reason certain persons have aroused fear in my heart and anxiety—but seeing that I am the loyal servant and son of the Sultān, if he will march lightly equipped and by rapid marches come and lay hands upon me, and carry me off I have nothing to urge against imprisonment, and if, as they have said the current rumours are true, and the Sultān's mind is in reality turned against me, I must perforce lay violent hands upon myself and efface myself from the world." When Ilmās Beg laid that ¹ letter before the Sultān, he on the instant sent ² Ilmās Beg to reassure 'Alāu-d-Dīn and gave him a promise that he himself would follow. Ilmās Beg embarked in a boat, and going like the wind over the surface of the water, ³ on the seventh day joined Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and urged him to proceed to Lakhnautī, ⁴ but certain of the wise and far-seeing companions of 'Alāu-d-Dīn said, "What need have we to go to Lakhnautī when the Sultān by reason of his excessive greed for the wealth of Deogīr, and the elephants and horses of that country will come here lightly equipped ⁵ in the very height of the rainy season. ⁶ At that time we will take any steps that may be necessary, ⁷ and whatever has to be done to meet the emergency, we have it all stored up and we will put an end to him on the spot." ⁸ Since the cup of the life of Sultān Jalālū-d-Dīn was full ⁹ and his heart was brim full of lust and greed for that fancied and ill-omened treasure, ¹⁰ and Fate too had rendered him deaf and blind, not one of these evil designs was perceived by him :

Verse.

If the listener will not turn his ear to counsel,
He will reap retribution from the high heaven.

The Sultān, whose life's boat had been wrecked by a contrary wind, and had been cast on the shore of destruction, arrived at Karra on the 17th of the blessed month of Ramazān: and 'Alāu-d-Dīn, who had kept his forces in readiness, had crossed the river Ganges between Karra and Manikpūr and had pitched his camp: then he sent Ilmās Beg to the Sultān, sending by him some valuable jewels, with strict orders to use all the means he could devise and all the craft he could command to separate the Sultān from his army and bring him to 'Alāu-d-Dīn. His confederate therefore went and presented himself before the Sultān, and with great craftiness and deceit, and with obsequious humility represented that² if he had not come 'Alāu-d-Dīn would have been utterly scared and would have escaped, "and to such an extent" said he, "have the evil speakers stuffed his ears³ with reports of the unkind and ill-disposed utterances of the Sultān, and filled his mind with fear, that even now fear and suspicion is by no means entirely removed from his mind.⁴ There is still a probability of that of which I spoke before, unless the Sultān should shew him some favour and kindness, and should re-assure him, and going alone, without any retinue, should take him by the hand and lead him here."

⁵The Sultān taking his blood-thirsty words for the truth, ordered the cavalry escort which accompanied him to remain halted where they were, and he himself, together with a small body of retainers armed and ready for battle, proceeded a short distance forward, going forth to meet Death, while the arch-

When they arrived near the bank of the river, the army of 'Alāu-d-Dīn was plainly visible drawn up in close order fully armed and equipped, and evidently expecting an engagement. Malik Khurram ⁴ the Vakildar said to Ilmās Beg "We left our army behind us at your instigation, and we laid down our arms, what is this that we see an army ready for action?" He replied "my brother wishes to review his army, and following his usual course, he wishes to make a proper display ⁵ before the Sultān, with an eye to future advantage," the Sultān in accordance with the saying "When fate comes the plain becomes narrow" ⁶ up to that moment even did not discover the deceit of his enemy, but of his own free will walked deliberately into the jaws of the dragon.

Verse.

When he said to the stony-hearted Ilmās Beg "In spite of my old age and the weakness due to fasting I came so far, ⁷ even yet will not your cruel brother's heart induce him ⁸ to get into a boat and come to me?" and is quite occupied in that service¹ and he has been preparing food for breaking your fast, and to do honour to the arrival of his guest, and is now awaiting the honoured coming of the Sultān, so that he may be distinguished among his peers by the honour derived from the royal visit." The Sultān all this time was occupied in reading the sacred volume; they reached the river's bank by the time of afternoon prayer and he took his seat in the place they had made ready for him to sit in, and 'Alāu-d-Dīn having got every thing ready² came with a great gathering to pay his respects to the Sultān and fell at his feet.³ The Sultān smiling, with affection and kindness and love smote him a gentle blow on the cheek, and addressing him with great shew of fondness and clemency and warm-heartedness, began to give him words of counsel, and was talking to him affectionately and lovingly, reassuring him in every possible way, and seizing the hand of Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn was drawing him near. At this moment when the Sultān laid hold of his beard, and, kissing him, was shewing him marks of his special favour, and⁴ had given his hand into his, 'Alāu-d-Dīn seizing the Sultān's hand firmly, wrenched it, and gave a signal to a party of men who were confederate and had sworn together to murder the Sultān. Then Maḥmūd Sālim who was one of the scum of Sāmāna, aimed a blow with his sword at the Sultān and wounded him; on receiving that wound the Sultān made for the boat crying out as he ran: "Thou wretch 'Alāu-d-Dīn, what is this thou hast done!" At this juncture one Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn who had been a particular protégé of the Sultān ran behind him and inflicted a second wound which killed him; he then cut off his head and brought it to 'Alāu-d-Dīn.⁵ By 'Alāu-d-Dīn's orders, the head of the unfortunate oppressed and martyred monarch was placed upon a spear and carried round Karra and Manikpūr: from thence they took it to Oudh; and the body-servants of the Sultān who were in the boat were all put to death, some of them threw themselves into the river, and were drowned in the ocean of destruction. Malik Fakhr-d-Dīn Kūchī fell into their hands alive and was murdered. Malik Ahmad Chap having made prisoners of the Sultān's army brought it to Dihlī and ¹ pending the arrival of Arkalī Khān from Multān (he was the worthy son of the Sultān and fitted to succeed him in the kingdom) as a temporary measure, with the co-operation of Malika-i-Jalān, seated Qadr Khān the youngest son of the Sultān, upon the throne of Dihlī, with the title of Ruknu-d-Dīn Ibrāhīm. The Amīrs and Maliks of Jalālu-d-Dīn's party came one and all to swear allegiance to him at his accession. He retained the name of King for one month. Malik 'Alāu-d-Dīn lost no time,² but on the very day of the assassination of the Sultān, made open display of the insignia and emblems of royalty, and raising the imperial canopy over his own head ³ was addressed as Sultān and ⁴ in the middle of the rainy season marching uninterruptedly he made straight for the metropolis of Dihlī, and showering dīnārs and dirhems like rain over the heads of the populace, and pelting the people in the streets great and small with golden missiles from balistae and slings,⁵ came to his own garden on the banks of the Jumna and alighted there. Day by day the Amīrs of the Jalālī faction joined themselves to him and swore allegiance to him, and by the hope of the red gold, all regret for Jalālu-d-Dīn was completely effaced from their black hearts.

Liberality is the alchemy ⁶ of the copper of faults ;
Liberality is the remedy for all pain.

It is said that by the day when Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn reached Badāon sixty thousand sowārs had joined his standard, Malik Raknu-d-Dīn Ibrāhīm seeing that he had not the power to resist him went to Multān to Arkalī Khān, with certain chosen Amīrs who remained faithful after the massacre (of Jalālu-d-Dīn), and the whole of the kingdom fell under the dominion of 'Alāu-d-Dīn.

The kingdom is God's and greatness is His. The massacre of 181.
Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn took place in the seventeenth of the month of Ramazān in the year 694 H. (A.D. 1294) and the duration of his reign was seven years and some months.

Verses.

Hast thou seen the acts of the tyrant heaven and its star, Mention it not; what is the heaven, its revolution, or its arched vault?

How is it that the revolving heaven has cast the sun of the kingdom headlong into the dust,
Dust be on the head of his sun of glory.

Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn had a taste for poetry, and Amīr Khusrū after the death of Mu'izzu-d-Dīn Kaiqubād, came into the service of the Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn, and was honoured by being selected as an intimate companion, and was made Qur'ān-keeper to the Sultān, he was presented every year with the robes of honour which were reserved for the Amīrs of the Sultān¹ and were tokens of special distinction and peculiar trust.

In this same category were Amīr Ḥasan and Muīd Jājarmī and Amīr Arslān Kātībī and Sa'd-i-Mantiqī and Bāqī-i-Khaṭīb and Qāzī Mughis of Hānsī, who is one of the most learned men of the time of Jalālu-d-Dīn and wrote a Ghazal in nineteen metres² of which this is the opening:—

Two pearly ears, a stately form, two lovely cheeks, with fresh youth dight,
Thy glory is the fairy's pride, a fairy thou, at glory's height.

And the rest of the learned men used to keep the Sultān's assembly embellished and adorned with the jewels of poems, and delicate points of learning and philosophy, and the following few verses are the offspring of the Sultān's genius:—

غزل نوزده بحر. It would appear from the statement that this ghazal or ode was made up of nineteen lines, each of which was in a different metre.
The first of the above lines is either Mutaqārib or Ramal. This is called ذو بحرین Zūbahrain (of two metres) in prosody.

The second line is in Ramal.

I do not wish those flowing locks of thine to be entangled
 I do not wish that rosy cheek of thine (with shame) to burn.
 I wish that thou one night unclothed may'st come to my embrace

Yes, loud I cry with all my might, I would not have it hidden.

And at the time when he was besieging Gwāliār he built a pavilion and a lofty dome¹ and wrote this quatrain as an inscription for that building :—

Quatrain.

I whose foot spurns the head of heaven,
 How can a heap of stone and earth augment my dignity ?
 This broken stone I have thus arranged in order that
 Some broken heart may haply take comfort from it.

And Sa'd Mantiqī and the other poets he ordered to point out to him the defects and beauties of this composition. They all praised it exceedingly and said ! It has no fault, but he replied :
 You are afraid of hurting my feelings, I will point out its defect² in this quatrain :

It may be some chance traveller may pass by this spot
 Whose tattered garment is the satin mantle of the starless sky;³
 Perchance from the felicity of his auspicious footsteps
 One atom may fall to my lot : this will suffice me.

 Hence there is a double play on the word اطلس here, in its opposite senses.

Verse.

As long as the head of the heir to the throne is on his shoulders,

Disorder is the mantle of the body of the state.

In the Muḥarram 696 A. H. (he sent) Ulugh Khān and Alp Khān against Arkālī Khān and Sultān Ruknu-d-Dīn; ⁵ both these Mīr Khusrū in the Tārīkh-i-'Alāi, states that 'Alāu-d-Dīn left Kāṭra Manikpur on the 19th of Rabī'ul Aḥir 695 H. and after taking great booty from Rām Deo, Rāi of Deogīr, returned to Kāṭra on the 28th Rajab. His accession to the throne took place on the 16th Ramūzān 695 H., and he arrived at Dihlī on the 22nd of Zilhijjah of the same year.

The text has possibly been corrected to agree with this author's date. Barnī does not give the day of the month: nor does Firishta. The latter tells us that on the death of Jalālu-d-Dīn, Malika-i-Jahān of her own accord set Qadr Khān the youngest son of Jalālu-d-Dīn on the throne, with the title of Ruknu-d-Dīn Ibrahim, and finding he was too young, sent to Multān to summon the second son Arkālī Khān, who refused to come hearing of 'Alāu-d-Dīn's success with the army.

² Barnī says that the title of Zafar Khān was conferred on Malik Hizabru-d-Dīn, (Elliott III. 157).

³ The text omits مقرر before داشتند supplied from MS. (A).

brothers were besieged¹ in the fortress of Multān. The inhabitants of the city and the Kotwāl asked for quarter, and made overtures for peace, and the two princes, by the intervention of Shaikh Ruknu-d-Dīn Quraishī may God sanctify his resting place,² came forth and had an interview with Ulugh Khān,³ who treated them with the utmost respect, sending a despatch announcing his victory to Dihlī; and taking the family and tribe of Jalālu-d-Dīn he set out for Dihlī. When they came near Bohar⁴ a place in the vicinity of Hānsī, Nuṣrat Khān arrived with an order, in obedience to which they put out the eyes of both the sons⁵ of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn, of Alghū Khān the Mughul son-in-law to the Sultān, and of Malik Aḥmad Chap,⁶ and handed over the Sultān's sons⁷ to the Kotwāl of Hānsī and martyred them together with two sons of Arkalī Khān.⁸ They kept the Sultān's wives and the rest of his children imprisoned in Dihlī, sending Aḥmad Chap and Alghū the Mughul to the fortress of Gwālīār, and putting out the eyes of some others also, scattered them in all directions and punished them with tortures, and very many of the old families they utterly destroyed and the hidden meaning of Sīdī Maula⁹ soon

And in the year⁴ 697 A.H. And in the year 698 A. H. Qutluq Khwāja, the son of Duā,¹ came from Māwarāu-n-nahr with a countless host to attempt the conquest of Hindustān, and penetrated² as far as Dihlī, inflicting no injury on the districts through which he passed. In Dihlī itself grain became very dear, and the citizens were in great straits,³ and Sultān 'Alāu-d-
 185. Dīn placing Ulugh Khān and Zafar Khān in command of the forces, sent them with a countless host to oppose the Mughul army, and a severe battle was fought on the frontiers of Gili.⁴ Zafar Khān was killed, and the Sultān had gained what he wanted in this.⁵ Qutluq Khwāja after his defeat made his way to Khurāsān where he died.

A third time Targhī Mughul who was one of the margans,⁶ that is to say accurate archers of that country, accompanied by 100,000 infantry and 20,000 valiant and renowned cavalry, seized the fort of the hills, and gaining possession of that country, penetrated as far as the township of Baran, where Malik Fakhru-d-Dīn Amīr Dād the Governor was entrenched; Malik Tughlaq Ghāzī-i-Mulk was sent from the metropolis to put down that disturbance.⁷ Malik Fakhru-d-Dīn sallying from the fortress of Baran,⁸ joined with Malik Tughlaq, and they jointly made a night attack upon the Mughuls.⁹ The Mughul forces being routed, Targhī was taken prisoner and Malik Tughlaq brought him into the royal presence.

a very large army, which they divided into two, one bore down upon Nāgor,¹ while the other seized the fort of the Sirmūr hills and occupied the country as far as the river Biāh which they call Kālī Pānī.² Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn appointed Malik Mānik his slave (who is Kāfūr Nāib or Hazār Dinārī³) with Malik Tughlaq Governor of Depālpūr to proceed to Amroha; and while the Mughul army, having succeeded in capturing much spoil and many cattle, was marching to the banks of the river Rahab, Malik Mānik came up in pursuit⁴ and a severe battle ensued. Both the Mughul princes evinced great bravery, but were ultimately taken prisoners, and were put to death, while the greater part of those accursed ones became food for the sword of vengeance, and the remnant of the sword fled panicstricken to their own country. The heads of these two princes were taken to Badāon and impaled upon the battlements of the fort. One of the learned poets of that time wrote the following quatrain which was afterwards inscribed upon the southern gateway of that city. 186.

Quatrain.

May the victory and conquest of the Emperor ever be thy the *Tārīkh-i-Khazāinu-l-Futūḥ*¹ a marvel of literature, which mortal powers confess themselves impotent to approach or imitate, though to tell the truth all the writings of that king of poets, rightly named Khusrū, are of this excellence, and to praise and crown them is an impertinence and error for any other.

Whenever any thought shines forth from his mind
It is so subtle as to escape comprehension and defy imitation.

On the fifth occasion Iqbālmand and Kapak, Mughuls, brought together an army to take vengeance for *Turtāq*² and 'Alī Beg, and invaded the frontiers of Multān. The Sultān on this occasion also appointed Malik Nāib, and Malik Tughlaq. They proceeded by forced marches while the Mughuls were falling back, and pursuing them gave battle. Kapak was taken prisoner, but was ransomed by the infidel Tātārs, with the prisoners and abundant booty which had fallen into their hands.³ From that day the Mughuls lost their enthusiasm for the conquest of Hindustān, and the teeth of their ambition became blunted.

187. After these victories, the Sultān one night was holding a wine party quite at his ease with his companions, and was quaffing copious draughts of wine. The night, like the circulation of the wine cup, had come near to an end ; suddenly some of the assembled guests began to make signs to each other⁴ with hand, and eye, and brow that it was time to break up,⁵ the Sultān happened to perceive it, he was annoyed and cried out Mutiny ! Mutiny ! and on the instant gave orders for Bahā (who was one of his boon-companions and choice spirits) to be killed. The rest fled in confusion. On the following morning when he came to realise what had occurred, it was as clear as day to the Sultān¹ that his suspicion was groundless.

Wait, till the world removes the veil from the face of events,
And till that thou hast done this evening, tomorrow is plain to thee.

Then he asked for Qāzī Bahā.² They replied, He was sent into eternity at that very moment.³ The Sultān was very repentant and ashamed at hearing this, and vowed never again to drink wine, and ordered it to be proclaimed that the use of wine should be absolutely abandoned throughout the kingdom. Cask upon cask of wine was poured out in the court till it became a flowing river. Everyone who was discovered intoxicated, was hauled off to prison, and punished by imprisonment⁴ and confiscation of property.

Piety and penitence became the order of the day, the taverns were in ruins,⁵ and the police officers had plenty of work, and there was no longer any need to purchase vinegar,⁶ while the wine bibbers were giving expression by their actions to these verses :

Now he sprinkles the flagon with salt, now he shatters the 188. And in the year 697 H. (1297 A.D.) the Sultān becoming suspicious of the newly-converted Muslim Mughuls was contemplating to murder and eradicate them, and they also for their part, goaded by the extortion of the revenue collectors and their extortionate demands for refunding money,¹ were plotting a rebellion whilst the Sultān should be hunting and hawking.² One of them who was opposed to this scheme made it known to the Sultān. Secret orders were written and despatched to the Governors of the country saying that on a certain day³ they should put to death all the new Muslim Mughuls with one consent wherever they found them.

Accordingly on the appointed date they despatched so many poor hapless Mughuls with the sword of injustice, and sent them on their travels to the kingdom of annihilation, that the mind cannot compute their number, and the name of Mughul no longer survived in Hindustān, although this custom of killing strangers has survived from that time.

And in the commencement of affairs, the fact of so many victories following one another in close succession led to extravagant ambitions in the mind of the Sultān; one of these was religious innovation, and moreover by the assistance of these four Ulugh Khān, Nusrat Khān, Zafar Khān and Alp Khān he was led to estimate himself as being superior to the Prophet on whom be the peace and blessing of God,⁴ and his companions may God be gracious to them all.⁵ The second was the conquest of the whole inhabited world like Sikandar; this led to his ordering his name to be inscribed on the currency and mentioned in the proclamation as Sikandar-i-ṣānī.⁶ When he sought the advice of 'Alāu-l-Mulk Kotwāl of Dihlī he restrained the Sultān from pursuing both these claims and said, "No one can evolve a religion out of his own brain unless he be aided ¹ by God, and till he can perform miracles ² This object cannot be acquired by the strength of dominion, and wealth, and majesty, and splendour, moreover such an attempt may be expected, nay is certain to result in violent disorders and tumults of all kinds, nothing will be gained while disgrace will follow the attempt: as for conquering realms, it is a worthy ambition, but needs the highest qualifications, as well as perfection of rule and a vazīr like Aristotle, none of which are here existent.

If the Sultān clears Hindustān of infidels and frees the environs of Dihlī from these contumacious ruffians, this will be in no way inferior to the world conquests of Sikandar."

The Sultān, after due meditation, was greatly pleased with these proofs deduced from reason and supported by precedent, and bestowed a robe of honour upon 'Alāu-l-Mulk and gave him large rewards, and abstained from attempting to satisfy either of his ambitions. The Amīrs, who on account of the harshness of the Sultān, and the roughness of his temper, were unable to say anything of service, all sent presents of horses and valuables for 'Alāu-l-Mulk and were loud in praise of him. 189.

And in the year 698 H. (1298 A.D.) he appointed Ulugh Khān to the command of a powerful army, to proceed into the country of Gūjerāt against Rāi Karan who had thirty thousand cavalry, and eighty thousand infantry, and thirty head of elephants. Ulugh Khān, after Rāi Karan was defeated, ravaged and laid waste Nahrwāla, and pursued him;¹ and Rāi Karan took refuge with Rai Rāmdeo² who was the ruler of Deogīr, in the country of the Deccan. The family of Rāi Karan, with his treasury and elephants and all his possessions, fell into the hands of the Muslim warrior. Among the ladies of his harem was one Dewalrānī, of whom Khizr Khān the son of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn ultimately became enamoured. He related the account of his amours to Mir Khusrū for him to turn into verse, and the book of Khizr Khān and Dewalrānī, which is known as the 'Ashīqa', is in his name. Ulugh Khān carried off an idol from Nahrwāla (in place of the idol of Somnāt which Sultān Maḥmūd had carried³ to Ghaznī, and the Hindūs had made an object of their worship,) and took it to Dihlī where he caused it to be trampled under foot by the populace; then he pursued Rāi Karan as far as Somnāt, and a second time laid waste the idol temple of Somnāt, and building a mosque there retraced his steps.

Nusrat Khān having proceeded to Kūhanbāyat,⁴ a well-known post, seized much spoil of valuable goods and rubies and other jewels from the traders;⁵ Kāfūr Hazār Dīnārī whom the Sultān Alāu-d-Dīn had latterly taken into close favour, and made Nāibu-l-Mulk, was part of that booty.

When Ulugh Khān arrived on the frontiers of Alwar he occupied himself with verifying the amount of property and spoil which had fallen into the hands of his people during these several battles, and exacted the giving up of much of it with great severity. A certain party of Mughuls who accompanied him thought Cambay, in Gujerat. According to Hunter (Imp. During the 11th and 12th centuries, Cambay appears as one of the chief ports of the Anhelwāra (Nahrwāla) kingdom and at the conquest of that kingdom by the Musulmāns in 1297, it is said to have been one of the richest towns in India.

this rather unfair, and consequently plotted a rebellion, but eventually were dispersed; some of them went off to Rāi Hamīr Dev in Jhāin,¹ which is near Rantanbhor, and some went elsewhere.

Ulugh Khān proceeded by continuous marches to his master at Dihli, and from this we gather that the massacre of the foreigners (above alluded to) took place after the arrival of Ulugh Khān from Gujrāt. Historians have paid little attention to the due order of events, but God knows the truth.

And in the year 699 H. (1299 A.D.) Ulugh Khān was nominated to proceed against the fortress of Rantanbhor and Jhāin, which is better known as Naushahr,² and Rāi Hamīr Dev, the grandson of Rāi Pithora,³ who had ten thousand cavalry, and countless infantry, and celebrated elephants, gave him battle but was defeated, and with great generalship withdrew the whole of his forces into the fortress of Rantanbhor.

Ulugh Khān having reported⁴ the state of affairs to the Court, urged the Sultān to capture the fort; the Sultān collected his forces⁵ and marched against Rantanbhor, and in a short time, by skilful effort, and aided by the energy of his Maliks, completely subdued and took the fortress, and despatched Hamīr Dev to hell. Great booty, and spoil, and treasures fell into his hands. Then he appointed⁶ a Kotwāl to hold that fortress, and having bestowed the country of Jhāin upon Ulugh Khān, left to attack Chitor,⁷ and having conquered that place also within a few days, ¹ Tieffenthaler, I. p. 322, mentions a city called Tschān at a distance of five miles from the fortress of Rantanbhor. This would appear to be probably the place spoken of in the text.

See Elliot, III. 146 where Jhāin is said to be Ujjain, also p. 172, note 1, where this opinion is abandoned.

Among the events which happened in this expedition this was one, that Nusrat Khān had come from Karra² to Rantanbhor, to reinforce Ulugh Khān before the Sultān arrived there;³ and during the siege one day a stone struck him on the head, and he went without delay to the other world. One arm of the Sultān, that is to say Zafar Khān, had been broken in the fight with Qutluq Khwāja, and now the second arm was broken also.

When the army was encamped in the neighbourhood of Malhab⁴ the Sultān one day was engaged in the hunting field;⁵ when night came on he remained in the plain, and at dawn of day he posted his troops all round, while he himself with a select following ascended an eminence and was watching the sport.⁶ In the meantime the brother's son of the Sultān, Akat Khān,⁷ together with a band of new-Muslim Mughuls who were engaged in performing the duties of guards, attacked the Sultān relentlessly and smote him with arrows, seized him and wounded his arm. As it was the winter season, and the Sultān was wearing a cap⁸ stuffed with cotton his wounds were not fatal. Akat Khān wished to alight from his horse and strike off the Sultān's head from his body, but some of the attendants pretending to side with him and take his part, cried out, the Sultān is killed! Akat Khān was satisfied at hearing this, and made off with all speed to the camp on horseback, and entering the royal hall of audience seated himself upon the throne, and drawing the canopy over his head, the Amirs, in accordance with ancient custom, gave in their allegiance to him as the rightful king,¹ and raised no overt objection. Akat Khān was so overwhelmed by his inordinate lust that on the instant he made an attempt upon the haram,² but Malik Dīnar Haramī who was on guard at the entrance to the haram with his men armed and equipped, said, Till you shew me the head of the Sultān I will not permit you to set foot within this private chamber. Sultān Alāu-d-Dīn, when he had somewhat regained consciousness³ after that perilous attack, bound up his wounds. He was convinced in his own mind that Akat Khān, in unison with the Amīrs who had revolted, had had the audacity to make this disgraceful attempt upon his life. for that were it not so, he was not the man to attempt it alone.

Accordingly his intention was to make his way to Jhāin (where Ulugh Khān was) with the fifty or sixty attendants who had remained with him, and see what course Ulugh Khān would recommend. One or two of his confidential retainers pointed out the unwisdom of this course and urged him to go at once to the royal pavilion and kingly court.

Before they arrived at the Court fifty horsemen joined them, and Akat Khān took the road to Afghānpūr, but a body of men who had been despatched in pursuit of him by forced marches made him prisoner,⁴ sent him into the Sultān's presence, and then utterly destroyed all his family and relations wherever they found them, among whom Qutluq Khān his brother also perished.⁵

If thou revoltest against thy benefactor
Even if thou art the sun, thou wilt fall headlong.

This further occurrence took place, namely, when the Sultān was engaged in besieging Rantanbhor, a person named Hājī Maulā, one of the slaves of Maliku l-Umarā Kotwāl,² gathered together certain ruffians, displayed a counterfeit order in Dihlī,³ entered the city by the Badāon gate, and sent for one Turmuḡī Kotwāl and in an instant cut his head off,⁴ closed the city gates, and sent a messenger to 'Alāu-l-Mulk⁵ a friend of his, who was Kotwāl of the New Castle, saying "An order has come from the Sultān, come and read it" 'Alāu-l-Mulk being fully alive to what was going on⁶ did not obey the summons, whereupon the rebel Hājī Maulā went to the Ruby Palace, and liberating all the prisoners, gave a horse and arms and a large bag (of gold) out of the treasury to each one, gathered together an immense following; then he seized by force Saiyyid Zāda-i-'Alawī Shāh Nabsa,⁷ who on his mother's side was descended from Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn Altamsh (Iyaltimish), summoning his chief men and nobles for the purpose, and seated him upon the throne at

The Maulā set off from the Red Palace with a party of horse, and went to the house of the poor 'Alawī. They carried him off by force and seated him on the throne in the Red Palace. The principal men of the city were brought by force and made to kiss his hand.—(Elliot III. 176). The editor remarks that the passage in which he is called the grandson of Shāh Najaf is very doubtful.

the entrance to the Red Palace, and compelled the chief men whether they would or no, to swear allegiance to him.

The Sultān, when he heard this tidings, did not publish it, nor did he betray any signs of emotion, until he had succeeded by superhuman effort in entirely¹ reducing the fortress. A week had hardly passed after this exploit of Hājī Maulā when Malik Hamīdu-Dīn, who was Amir of Koh, with his sons who were renowned for their valour, and a body of the cavalry of Zafar Khān who had come from Amrohā to oppose the Mughuls,² engaged Hājī Maulā in fight, and having destroyed him, put to death the hapless Saiyyid Zāda also, and sent their heads to Rantanbhor. The Sultān nominated Ulugh Khān to proceed to Dihli to track out those who had taken part in that³ rebellion, and bring them to destruction. He also completely eradicated the family and relations of Maliku-l-Umarā on this suspicion that Hājī Maulā would not have embarked on this enterprise without their instigation.⁴

The Sultān after adding the fortress of Rantanbhor and its surrounding districts to the jāegīr of Ulugh Khān returned (to Dihli). Ulugh Khān was taken ill that very day while on the road, and died,⁵ and Rantanbhor became for him like the Paradise of Shaddād.⁶

Iram of the columns "This city is said to have been situated in Yemen, between Hazramaut and Ṣana'ā. It was founded by Shaddād ibn 'Ād, who was excessively strong and mighty, and when he heard of Paradise and of what God had prepared therein for his saints, 'palaces of gold and silver and abodes beneath which rivers flow, and upper chambers above which are other upper chambers, (Qur'ān xxxix. 21) he said to his mighty men 'Verily I will take to myself upon the earth a city like unto Paradise.' Then he appointed thereunto a hundred men of his servants and mighty men of valour, and under the hand of each of them a thousand helpers, and bade them search out and find an open space of the plain in the land of Yemen, and choose the best thereof in soil. Then he provided them with wealth, and designed for them the pattern of their work, and wrote to his three chief lords Ghānim-ibn-'Ulwān, Zabḥāk ibn 'Ulwān, and Walīd ibnūr Raiyyān, and charged them to write to their lords in the utmost parts of their cities that they should collect all that was in their land of gold and of silver, of pearls and of rubies, of musk and ambergris and saffron, and should send them unto him. Then he sent unto all the mines, and took out therefrom all the gold and the silver that was in them, and he sent his three agents to the divers into the oceans, and they brought out therefrom jewels, and gathered them together as it were mountains, and all of this was brought to Shaddād. Then they sent the miners to the mines of rubies and emeralds and all other jewels, and they brought out from thence immense riches. Then he ordered and the gold was beaten and fashioned into bricks, and he builded therewith that city, and he commanded the pearls and the rubies, the onyx and the emerald and the cornelian, and the walls of the city were set with them. And he made for it upper chambers, and above them other chambers supported on columns, and to all of them pillars of emerald and of onyx and of ruby. Then he caused to flow beneath the city a wide channel which he brought to the city from beneath the earth a space of forty leagues, like to a large canal. Then he ordered, and there were made to flow from that channel, rivulets in the streets, and highways and streets flowed with clear water. And he ordered banks to be made for that canal and for all the rivulets, and they were overlaid with red gold, and the pebbles thereof were made of all kinds of precious stones, red and yellow and green. And there were planted on either bank of the stream and of the rivulets trees of gold bearing fruit, and the fruits of them were of those rubies and precious gems. And the length of the city was made twelve farsakhs and the breadth thereof like unto the length. And the walls of the city were high and lofty, and there were builded therein three hundred thousand palaces set with all kinds of jewels within and without. And he built for himself in the midst of the city on the bank of the canal a palace lofty and high, towering over all those palaces * and there passed in the building of it five hundred years.

was taken. When the Sultān asked Muḥammad Shāh (who had been wounded) 'If I should spare your life and have you cured, and you should thus escape this deadly danger, how would you treat me in future?' he replied, 'If I should get well and should have an opportunity, I would kill you and raise the son of Hamir Dev to the throne.' The Sultān wondered, and was amazed at this audacity, and enquired of his most shrewd and astute Amīrs the reason why the people had so turned against him, and why these continual riots and seditions were so constantly occurring, and further sought to know how to set about remedying these evils. They shewed him several paths of conduct which would end naturally in four things. Firstly, that the king should in his own person be aware of the enterprises both good and bad which are going on in his kingdom. Secondly, that he should put an end to wine bibbing, which is the source of so much evil. Thirdly, abandonment by the maliks of their gadding about to each others' houses and holding deliberative meetings.¹ Fourthly, to demand back the money which he had lavished, from all classes, whether soldiery or populace, because it is the fountain head of all riot and sedition, especially upstarts and nouveaux riches,² and in a short time these regulations would by their inherent good, be acceptable to the Rāis, and pass from potentiality to actuality just as has already been related in a former place.

The Sultān did away with wine drinking, and brought the other

Then Almighty God wished to send a warning to him and to his host, calling him to repentance, and he chose to himself Hūd ibn Khālīd who came and called upon Shaddād to believe and confess the power and unity of God, but he persisted in his idolatry and disobedience. Then Hūd warned him of punishment to come and of the fall of his kingdom, but he would not be moved from his evil ways."

At last he was informed that the city was finished and he set out to go to it with three hundred thousand, leaving all his kingdom to his son Murṣad who had it is said believed in the words of Hūd. When Shaddād arrived with one day's journey of Iram a voice came from heaven, and he and all who were with him fell dead, not one remained, and all who were in the city died, the workmen and artificers, the agents and warriors, not a soul remained alive. And the city sank into the earth."

regulations also into force, and also published several new rules of his own, which have never been heard of either before or after his time, whether they were in accordance with religious law or not ; one of these rules was that regulating the price of grain, and cloth, and horses, and all necessities essential to the comfort of the soldiery and populace, and the bestowal of rewards and alms upon all classes of the people, the detail of which is told at some length in the history of Ziā-i-Barnī.¹ Those laws were the most extraordinary of all: this cheapness of provisions was one of the chief sources of the prosperity of the people, and formed a stout wall of defence against the irruption of the Mughuls. And inasmuch as in mentioning some of these events and occurrences in the original work,² the chronological sequence has not been preserved, and they have been only incidentally mentioned as occasion arose, for this reason they have also been recounted here in the same manner.

And Malik Nāib informed the Sultān of the coming of Khizr Khān with considerable embellishment, saying that Alp Khān, the maternal uncle of Khizr Khān, who had arrived from Gujrāt, out of policy and prudence, having regard to the affairs of the State and in his desire to become Nāib and Vakīl, had himself summoned his sister's son, and further remarked that if this crude idea and immature desire had not fixed itself in the mind of Khizr Khān, why had he come unbidden to the Court?

time to Amroha till a command should issue summoning him to the presence. In the meantime he might engage in hunting, and he was to return to the Court his canopy and staff of office, and all the other insignia of royalty. Khizr Khān having obeyed this order with a sad and distracted heart, after a little while relying upon the sincerity of affection he entertained for his father and the confidence between them, wrote to him to this effect,¹ that he had never committed any breach of trust which could cause the Sultān to be so wroth with him; then overcome by sorrow he determined to leave Amroha for Dīhlī. When he arrived to do obeisance to his father, the chord of fatherly affection was stirred in the heart of the Sultān, he clasped his son to his breast, and kissed him several times on the forehead, and motioned to him to go and see his mother. Khizr Khān went thither, and Malik Nāib out of villainy,² on the instant went back to the Sultān and filled his ears with lies, saying,³ ‘Khizr Khān has now come for the second time to the palace with evil intentions without orders, and the Sultān takes no notice of the matter.’ The Sultān upon this occasion gave orders to send both brothers, Khizr Khān and Shādi Khān, to the fortress of Gwāliār.⁴ Malik Nāib, after these two heirs had been deported, and the way was clear for Malik Shihābu-d-Dīn, the son of the Sultān by another mother, who was yet a lad of tender years, made him hoir-apparent and exacted from him an agreement.

In the *Nafahāt*⁴ it is stated upon the authority of Sultānu-l-Mashāikh Nizāmu-l-Auliya, may God sanctify his sacred resting-place, that on the day of judgment each individual will boast of some one thing, and my boast (said he) will be of the heart-burnings of this Turk Allāh⁵ (God's champion); Mīr Khusrū probably alludes to this when he says :—

201. Khusrū my friend, strive in the right way
That you may be called Turk-i-Khudā (God's champion).

Another poet was Mīr Ḥasan Dihlavī,⁶ whose anthology also has enslaved the east and west of the world. Although in that reign there were other poets who composed anthologies, still by reason of these two eminent poets the mention of the others sinks into insignificance.

“ When the sun comes out the stars disappear.”

The death of Mīr Khusrū took place in the year 725 H. (1325 A.D.). He is buried in Dihli at the foot of the sacred tomb of his

Mir Khusrū, the Khusrū of the kingdom of eloquence,
That ocean of excellence, and sea of perfection ;
His prose is more attractive than flowing water,
His poetry purer than the most limpid streams ;

⁴ The letters of عديم المثل give the date 725. Thus 70 + 4 + 10 + 40 + 1 + 30 + 40 + 500 + 30. So also do those of طوطي شكر مقال. Thus 9 + 6 + 9 + 10 + 300 + 20 + 200 + 40 + 100 + 1 + 30 = 725. Not counting the hamza.

Mir Khusrū died in the month of Ramazān 725 A. H. (1325 A.D.) and is said in the Majma'u-l-Fuḥḥā to have been buried in the burial place of Shaikh Shakkar Ganj ; as above stated in the text he was buried close to the grave of his spiritual guide Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliyā.

After being taken by 'Alāu-d-Dīn, which event is noteworthy as being the first appearance of the Muḥammadans in the Deccan, it was given back to its Rājā Ramchandra who rebelled, was subdued by Nāib Malik Kāfūr, taken prisoner and sent to Dihlī whence he was restored to his kingdom. SULTĀN SHIHĀBU-D-DĪN IBN 'ALĀU-D-DĪN KHILJĪ deserted Dihlī for Deogiri which he renamed Daulatābād and issued stringent orders to all the inhabitants of Dihlī to remove to the new capital.

202. Who was a child, ascended the throne as a puppet in the month of Shawwāl, 715 A.H. (1316 A.D.) by the exertions, and with the consent of Malik Nāib, and was styled by the above title. He sent Malik Ikhtiyāru-d-Dīn Sanbal to the fortress of Gwālīār to put out the eyes of Khizr Khān and Shādī Khān. He also caused the mother of Khizr Khān, Malika-i-Jahān, to be imprisoned, and confiscated all her property, and having thrown the Shāhzāda, whose name was Mubārak Khān, into prison, intended to put out his eyes, but fate did not second his efforts.

Ibn Batūta (Paris Edn. IV. 46) who visited at this time, compares it to the former capital, and say that the citadel was named دوبقير. This was evidently the old name of the city, Deogīr as we should probably read ديوقير.

¹ Nūru-d-Dīn 'Abdu-r-Rahmān was born in 817 A.H. (1414 A.D.) at Jām Khurāsān, whence he took the name of Jāmī.

His father's name was Nizāmu-d-Dīn Ahmad. He was from his earliest years distinguished for his mental powers, and at the early age of five received the name of Nūru-d-Dīn (Light of the Faith) and later he was known as Maulānā. He became very famous and attained to the highest dignity attainable by a mystic, that of 'Ārif. He wrote many works in poetry, grammar and theology, among others the Haft Aurang, a series of seven poems, viz., Silsilatu-l-Zahab, The golden chain; Qiṣṣa-i-Salāmān wa Absāl, Story of Salāmān and Absāl; Tuḥfatu-l-Aḥrar; The Offering to the Wise; Subḥatu-l-abrār, Rosary of the Pious; Yūsuf wa Zuleikha, Yusuf and Zuleikha; Laili wa Majnūn, Laili and Majnūn Khīrad Nāma, Book of Wisdom.

He died in the year 898. H. (1492 A.D.)

See: Hājī Khalīfah 14412. Yusuf and Zuleikha (Griffith's Preface.) Beale (Dict. of Or. Biog.). p. 132.

When his attempts to uproot the family of 'Alāu-d-Dīn became known, two sirdars named Mubashshir and Bashīr in concert with a body of pāiks of the garrison of the Hazār Sutūn palace, one night murdered Malik Nāib.¹

Verse.

If thou doest evil, hope not for good,
For never wilt thou gather grapes from thorns ;
I do not imagine that thou who hast sown barley in autumn
When harvest comes wilt gather in wheat.

Then, having released Shāhzāda Mubārak Khān from prison, they appointed² him to be Nāib to Sultān Shihābu-d-Dīn in place of Malik Nāib: Mubārak Khān carried on the affairs of the state for one or two months after that, and succeeded in conciliating the Amīrs and Maliks. Then he sent Sultān Shihābu-d-Dīn to the fortress of Gwālīār where he finally died in the year 716 H.³

And the period of the reign of Shihābu-d-Dīn was three months and a few days.

² MS. (A) منصوب گردانیدند.

³ There is a difference here of great importance between the printed text and the MS. The former has 710 H. while MS. (A) reads 716 H. which is correct, as is seen from the Nuh Sipihr of Mīr Khusrū.

⁴ MS. (A) بقتل رسانیده.

With regard to the succession of Shihābu-d-Dīn, see Firishṭa, who describes him by the name of 'Umar Khān (Brigg's Firishṭa I. 383). His full name was Shihābu-d-Dīn 'Umar according to Mīr Khusrū.

and Vazīrs in the early part of the year 717, H.¹ and apportioning appointments and suitable jāegīrs among his most trusted Amīrs, specially distinguished by promoting to high office one Ḥasan, Barāwar bacha,² who was very handsome, and had been brought as a captive from Mālwa. He had been the protégé of Malik Shādī Nāib-i-Khāss, the Hājib of Sultān ‘Alāu-d-Dīn.³

He gave him the title of Khusrū Khān. The tribe of Barāwar⁴ are a family of servile position in Gujrat; but now in the kingdom of Dihli, the Sultān, to such an extent was he infatuated by his beautiful face, raised him, in spite of his unfitness for the office, to the trusted post of Vazīr.

Verse.

If thou desirest thy kingdom to be glorious
Give not high office to an upstart;
Unless thou wishest that thy state should be ruined
Entrust not thy affairs to the inexperienced.

And Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn, inasmuch as he had undergone the affliction of imprisonment, on the very first day of his reign had all the prisoners liberated, and appointed Malik Fakhr-d-Dīn Jūnā the Son of Ghāzī Malik, who eventually was entitled Muḥammad ‘Ādil, to be Mīr Akhor.⁵

In the first year of his reign he contemplated the conquest of Deogīr otherwise called Daulatābād,⁶ but his Amīrs opposed and dissuaded him.

¹ So also the Tārīkh-i-Fīroz Shāhī of Barnī, but Khusrū in both the ‘Ashīqa and Nuh Sipihr, says the beginning of 716 H. In the latter poem the date is specifically stated to have been the 24th of Muḥarram, 716 H. But Firishta says the 7th of Muḥarram, and the editor states in a footnote to the translation of the Nuh Sipihr, that in some loose extracts the date is 717 H.

‘Alāu-d-Dīn having died on the 7th Shawwāl 715 and Shihābu-d-Dīn having reigned three months and a few days, would bring the accession of Qutbu-d-Dīn to about the middle or end of Muḥarram 716, so that we may consider this as the correct date unless there was an interregnum of a whole year, of which there is no evidence.

In the year 718 H. (1318 A.D.) Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn sent Sar Salāhi Kotwāl,¹ with orders to proceed to Gwāliār and put to death Khizr Khān and Shādi Khān. Having done this he summoned Dewal Rāni and included her in his haram. With reference to this Mir Khusrū writes :

Verses.

In short one who is acquainted with the secret of this mystery
In this way opened the door of this treasury of secrets,
That when the Sultān Mubārak Shāh in cruelty
Turned against his own kith and kin with anger and frowning,
He considered that the interests of the country demanded their murder,
And thought that they deserved the sharp sword.
His object was to empty the country of noble men by malicious enterprise.
Secretly he sent a messenger to Khizr Khān
Making treacherous protestations of hearty good will Saying, Oh thou shining light who remainest far from the assembly,
Thy body ill at ease and thy countenance without light ;
Thou knowest that this is none of my doing,
The oppressed remains while the oppressor disappears.
If thou art imprisoned, by the Lord of the world
When the time comes he himself will loosen these bonds.
In this matter haste and anxiety are not fitting,
An elephant extricates itself from the mire by patient endeavour.
Now, we too are engaged in plumbing this matter
So that by clever contrivance we may free you from that captivity.

205.

If thou art fitted to become a king
 We will make thee ruler over a wide kingdom.
 But the affection for some one which springs in thy heart
 Is not fitted for the loftiness of thy ambition.
 Dewal Rānī who is but a handmaiden to thee,
 For whom even were the moon needed as handmaid this were an easy matter,
 I have heard that she is so dear to thee
 That thy cypress-like form stoops to kiss her feet.
 This is not fitting that from shortsightedness
 The king should be enslaved by a slave.
 The gourd is in any case of no account in the garden
 That it should attempt to raise its head in emulation of the Chinār.
 A straw which places its foot upon the face of the stream
 Is carried hither and thither by the wind and buffeted by the floods.¹
 [My heart's desire makes this request, that thou should'st give up that mistress of thine.]
 Since she went from here, send her back hither again
 Send her to take her place at the foot of my throne.
 When the infatuation of thy mind is somewhat less
 We will send her back to thee to be thy handmaid.
 When the messenger went and took back the message
Khizr Khān's heart no longer enjoyed any rest.
 First he wept tears of blood which flooded his eyes and lips,
 Then he sent back an answer mingled with blood Saying, since the Shāh has attained his ambition in becoming a sovereign,
 He must leave Dewal Rānī to me.
 If however you desire to deprive me of this wealth
 You desire to see me despoiled of wealth and light.
 Since this heart's delight holds her head as high as mine
 Cut off my head, afterwards thou wilt know.
 When the messenger, from that grief-stricken soul

So called according to some because he will cover the earth with his adherents like as the tar covers the body of the mangy camel, the word دجل dajjala in Arabic having the primary meaning of smearing with tar.

According to others he is so called because of his lying (secondary meaning of دجل) in arrogating to himself godship; or again from دجل dajjala in the twofold signification of "covering" (truth with falsehood) or "gilding," see Lane s. v.

According to the Mishkāt, Dajjāl will be the second of the ten signs or tokens which are to precede the resurrection. After three of these signs have occurred, namely, the rising of the sun in the west, the coming of Dajjāl, and the appearance of the beast which is to emerge from the mountain of Safah, repentance will no longer avail anything.

The coming of Dajjāl is to be a time of calamity such as has never before been known. He is of low stature though bulky, with splay feet, blind, with the flesh even on one side of his face without the mark of an eye. His right eye is blind, like the seed of a grape, and the word كفر kufir, Infidelity, is written between his eyes, he is to appear from the middle of a road between Syria and 'Irāq and will mislead on the right hand and on the left. The repetition of the Chapter of the Cave (Qur'ān XVIII) will be a means of repelling his wickedness. He will not be able to enter either Mecca or Medinah. His stay upon earth is to last forty days, one day equal to a year, and another day equal to a month, another day like a week and rest of the days like ordinary days. Dajjāl will it is said bestow great abundance upon those who believe in him, but sorely afflict those who reject him. He is to perform miracles such as killing a youth by severing him in two with a sword and restoring him to life. Then Jesus will descend from heaven and will destroy Dajjāl at the entrance to a village called Lud in Palestine. The Jews of Iṣfahān will follow Dajjāl before whose coming there will be three years during the first of which the sky will withhold one-third of its rain and the earth one-third of her productions, during the second the sky will withhold two-thirds and the earth two-thirds, during the third neither sky nor earth will yield rain nor produce, and every animal in the earth will die. He will then come forth upon a white ass, the space between the ears of which is seventy feet.

When he gave the signal and brandished his sword on all sides ¹
 Not one leapt like lightning from that mass of clouds.
 May God have mercy !

How could anyone draw the sword of revenge upon that crowd of moonlike faces.

Whose heart would not be torn with distracting grief
 In pity for so many young and beautiful men ?

Oh Lord ! may the breast of heaven be rent a hundredfold
 To think that it has brought so many noble ones to the dust.
 How can you look for pity for the blood he sheds, in the heart of the butcher ?

Whose one desire is to see his knife stained with blood.
 When the bloody butcher binds roses upon his head,
 Why should he withhold his knife from the rose-like body ?
 Since no one of them desired that the sword should succeed in shedding their blood,²

There leapt from their midst like a whirlwind

A man of low origin, a Hindū by birth

Dusky of hue, like to Ahriman,³

Nay ! a thousand Ahrimans would stand aghast at his face

Grief-increasing like the pleasure of those in distress,

Wrong in judgment like the intellect of young people ;

Unlucky to look upon as a young owl,

Like a morning in Dai ⁴ at Ghaznī cold and inhospitable ;

Like the night of sorrow his forehead full of gloom,

Like the nature of a wicked man, accursed.

 Martyrdom was evident ⁴ in Khizr in that palace;
 Just as the tree praises God when its branches put forth leaves
 The heaven kept lamenting over his punishment;
 The angels continually assisted him in his martyrdom,
Rizwān threw open the gates of Paradise,
 All the Hūrīs began to sing his praises.
 From that martyr's shout of triumph which came forth from the Shāh,
 The sun and moon joined in the martyr's song.
 When the dagger was raised aloft and the Shāh's face was seen amid its clustering locks,
 Lamentation arose in that assembly like ⁵ the roll of thunder;
 The sun made his body a shield to protect him,
 But Fate turned it on one side from before him.
 When the sword of Fate severs the cord of Hope,
 Neither sun nor moon can become a shield for thee;
 With one blow which that ruthless one struck
 He made the Shāh's head a guest in his bosom.
 To wash away the blood, the revolving water-wheel of the sky
 Required that the spring of the sun should yield all its blood;
 But, since there was no longer a breath of life in his body,
 Of what avail was it to wash the blood from the surface of it.
 Dewal Rānī, who was a woman of dignity and beauty,
 Was the lifespring of Khizr Khān's existence.

In the year 718 H. (1318 A.D.) Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn marched for Deogīr with a larger army, and the Rāis of that country were not able to stand against him.

He flayed³ Harpāl Deo who had rebelled during the time which followed the death of Rām Deo.⁴ The country of the Marhattas also fell into the hands of Qutbu-d-Dīn who, having given Khusrū Khān the canopy and staff of office ordered him to proceed to Ma'bar, and having left Yakhlakhī in Deogīr as Nāib, returned to Dihlī. Near Badra-i-Sakūn⁵ Malik Asadu-d-Dīn ibn Yaghvash Khān who was called Malik Khamūsh, and who was the uncle's son of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, was smitten with the ambition of chieftainship,⁶ and plotted a rebellion against the Sultān, who however was warned⁷ of this design by one of his loyal adherents, and gave orders for the immediate execution of Malik Asadu-d-Dīn. He also sent orders that twenty of the relations of Yaghvash Khān who were aware of this conspiracy⁸ some of whom were children, should be executed, and when he reached Jhāin he sent Shādi Kath⁹ his chief captain to Gwaliār to bring the family and relations of the murdered Khizr Khān and Shādi Khān with the remainder of the haram of 'Alāu-d-Dīn to Dihlī, after having killed Sultān Shihābu-d-Dīn, which he carried out. Sultān Qutbu-d-Dīn was led by the fact that Khizr Khān had been a disciple of the Sultānu-l-Mashāikh Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliā, to regard that holy Shaikh with suspicion and distrust, and in opposition to the wishes of the holy Shaikh, sent for Shaikh Ruknu-d-Dīn from Multān, and honoured Shaikhzada-i-Jām, who was one of the opponents of Shaikh (Nizāmu-d-Dīn) with special distinction.

This latter is moreover supported by the statement of Barnī. "They had no knowledge whatever of the conspiracy, but were all seized and slaughtered like sheep."

Verse.

When God ¹ desires to openly disgrace any man
He leads him to abuse those of holy and pure nature;
And if God desires to hide the sins of any man
He leads him to talk little about the sins of other sinners.

His habits also underwent great change, and his heart emboldened him to walk in the valley of bloodshed as his father had done, so that rivers of blood began to flow, and he put to death without any cause Zafar Khān Walī of Gujerāt.

In the mean while Yaklakhī had prepared a rebellion in Deogīr, and had arranged to assume the insignia of royalty. At last when Khusrū Khān reached Deogīr, the men of the army who had been sent to Deogīr seized Yaklakhī and made him over to Khusrū Khān, who sent him bound to Dihlī where he was executed. The Sultān ² also put to death Malik Shāhīn who was
211. known by the title of Wafā Malik, without any reason save the representations of some intriguers.

In these days the Sultān used generally to array himself in women's garments, and adorning himself like them with gold and jewels, used to give public audience. Moreover he openly indulged in drinking and other forms of vice, inter marem feminamque discrimen nullomodo facere solebat.

It is only too plain in such a case, what must come to pass. And after the murder of Zafar Khān, he raised Husāmu-d-Dīn who was half-brother¹ to Khusrū Khān to succeed to the position 212. enjoyed by Zafar Khān and nominated him to proceed to Gujrāt. Husāmu-d-Dīn collected together the Barāwar² crew from all parts of that country and nursed a scheme of rebellion in his brain. The Amirs of Zafar Khān's party³ however seized him and sent him to Dibli. The Sultān led by the feelings he entertained towards Khusrū Khān took no steps to punish him, but had him set at liberty on the instant and gave him extraordinary privileges. Then he appointed Malik Waḥīdu-d-Dīn⁴ Quraishī, to Gujrāt in place of Husāmu-d-Dīn. He it was who was the cause of the arrest of Yaklakhi.¹ Khusrū Khān having arrived on the frontier of Telinga, and having blockaded the Rāi of that country in one of his fortresses, accepted several head of elephants² with treasure and valuables beyond all power of computation as a present from him, and moved his camp towards the Maithili country,³ and having gained possession of nine hundred and twenty elephants and a diamond weighing six dirams, came into the country of Ma'bar, and relying on that⁴ wealth entertained the idea of disobedience and rebellion, and obtaining permission to remain there, put to death several Amīrs whom he had with him. Malik Talbīgha Yaghda⁵ and Malik Talbīgha Nāgorī and Malik Hājī Nāib, with certain other Amīrs of the Sultān's party, becoming aware of his secret intentions threw him by force into a litter, and, marching with all haste by forced marches, conveyed him from Deogir to Dihlī in seven days and acquainted the Sultān with his nefarious designs. Khusrū Khān however in the private apartment of the palace where he enjoyed the special companionship of the Sultān, gained him over by artful and specious representations, and fully persuaded the Sultān of the villainy of the Amīrs.⁶ The Sultān took his words as Gospel, so greatly was he influenced and controlled by him, and was incensed against the Amīrs, censured them⁷ severely and subjected them to many indignities, and although they brought forward many veracious witnesses in support of their allegations it was all of no use, and the wretched witnesses were severely punished.

The story of Farazdaq the poet fits in with this, namely when he accompanied by his wife, appealed to the Khalīfah of Baghdād, he got Ja'far the Barmecide, to plead for him, and used his wife Zubeida Khātūn as an intermediary. Hārūn the Khalīfah was

The printed text has simply لکھی but MS. (A) reads یکلکھی Yaklakhi. Yakalakhī it will be remembered, had been appointed Governor of Deogir after Harpāl Deo had been taken and put to death. According to Barnī, Yaklakhi was "an old servant of 'Alāu-d-Dīn, who for many years was nāib of the barids" (couriers). Yaklakhi now revolted and was arrested by Waḥīdu-d-Dīn.

favourably disposed towards Zubeida, and passed orders in accordance with the petition of the wife of Farazdaq.¹ He accordingly wrote these lines :—

An advocate who appears before thee clothed
Is not like one who comes before thee naked.²

That is to say an intercessor who comes near thee wearing drawers will not be so influential as she who comes naked. From that day this became a proverbial saying among the Arabs.

As soon as Khusrū Khān became quite assured in all ways of his predominant influence over the Sultān, he gave orders for the assembly of all his tribe from Gujrat and began to introduce them into the service of the Sultān. The Sultān reposed entire confidence both in him³ and in his family, and gave up the reins of Government absolutely into his hands,⁴ abandoning himself to rioting and debauchery.⁵

² Read مستورا for متزرا which appears to be intended for متازرا. The occasion on which these lines were spoken was, according to Ibn Khalliqān, when Nawār the granddaughter of Dubeia, wished to marry one of the Quraish tribe, and asked Al-Farazdaq to act as her legal guardian because he was the son of her uncle. He however availed himself of a formal promise given by her to abide by his decision as to her affairs, to say he would marry her himself. Nawār was very angry at this and went to 'Abdullah ibn az-Zubair, sovereign of Hijāz and 'Irāq, to obtain redress. Al-Farazdaq set out also. They stopped at different houses. Al-Nawār stayed with al-Khāula wife of Abdullah ibn az-Zubair, and Al-Farazdaq with Hamza their son. Al-Khāula interceded for al-Nawār, and her intercession prevailed over that of Hamza whereupon Farazdaq spoke as above. (Ibn Khall: (de Slane), III. 624).

And the family of Barāwar¹ gained entire control of the Court of the Sultān, and used to assemble by day and by night at the house of Khusrū Khān to plot sedition and rebellion against the Sultān, and when Qāzī Zīāu-d-Dīn, who was known as Qāzī Khān, made these facts known, the Sultān who was the slave of his lust immediately summoned Khusrū Khān in private,² and informed him of what had been said, whereupon Khusrū Khān said, the people see the great kindness which the Sultān shews me and regard it as excessive, and from motives of jealousy falsely accuse me. The Sultān believed him and³ made over to him the keys of the royal treasury and of all the other store-houses as well: Khusrū Khān⁴ regarded this as a proof of his complete ascendancy deduced from it a favourable omen for his future;—

Eventually, one night the Sultān was holding a drinking party in the company of Khusrū Khān, and the Amirs of the guards withdrew from their posts. Qāzī Khān came down from the roof of the Hazār Sutūn palace and was engaged in examining if the doors were safe, and the guards posted.

And of the Amirs, some sided with Khusrū Khān out of lust for place and property, but some others were rebellious. When Ghāzī Malik heard this startling news his zeal for Islām and for the preservation of the honour of his benefactor was stirred, so that he girded up his loins for vengeance, and sending despatches to the Maliks of the various districts sought their aid in extirpating the ungrateful wretch. Malik Fakhrū-d-Dīn sent secretly a letter to his father conveying his intention to fly from Dihlī and asking for post horses,³ which in the Hindī tongue are called dāk chaukī, and for the posting of cavalry escorts at several places along the route.

And Ghāzī Malik himself previously to this had sent two hundred cavalry into the fort of Sarsutī. When Khusrū Khān awoke from his slumber of neglect he recognized that the departure of Malik Fakhrū-d-Dīn Jūnā was a strong proof of the decline of his own power:¹ accordingly he despatched the son of Qurra Qumār, whom he had appointed 'Arīz-i-Mamālik,² in pursuit of him. He proceeded as far as the town of Sarsutī, but on his arrival there was obliged to retrace his steps without finding an opportunity of accomplishing his object, and conveyed to Khusrū Khān tidings regarding the real state of affairs.

Ghāzī Malik, after the arrival of his son, was demonstrative³ in his expressions of satisfaction, and gave effect to the aspirations of the Malik; further by issuing orders for the commencement of the *jihād*⁴ he made amends for the previous delay, and gave full satisfaction to the demands of bravery by marching in the direction of Dihlī.

Khusrū Khān having bestowed upon his brother Khān-i-Khānān the canopy and staff of office, despatched Šūfī Khān with the other Amīrs of this canaille against Ghāzī Malik who for many years had done yeoman's service in the various wars with the Mughuls, and had everywhere returned victorious and triumphant. Khusrū Khān returning from Talpath came to the tomb of Malik Shādī⁷ who was an old patron of his, alone and distraught, and hid himself there in despair, but the following day they laid hands upon him, treating him with all possible indignity, and brought him to Ghāzī Malik,⁸ so that he reaped the reward of his infamous and abominable deeds.

Who is the same as Ghāzī Malik, ascended the throne in the year 720 A.H. (1321 A.D.) by the consent of the Amīrs and nobles and was styled by this title. In the space of one week he ordered and regulated the important affairs of the state with a perfection unattainable to others in the course of years.⁴

He appointed his own relations to various posts and showing many favours to the Amīrs of 'Alāu-d-Dīn and to some of the Maliks of Quṭbū-d-Dīn gave them districts. Then he directed his ambition to the rebuilding of the fortress of Tughlaqābād and all the lofty edifices, and set about it (without delay)⁵ and Badr Shā'ir Shāshī⁶ invented as a chronogram for the date of building

'Ubaid also terrified the Amīrs by his account of Ulugh Khān, and infidels springing up put to death many of the soldiers of the army;⁶ Malik Tigīn and other revolutionary Amīrs planned an insurrection against Ulugh Khān who with fifty sowārs came by rapid marches to the metropolis, whereupon the Amīrs took themselves off, each to his own district; and Malik Tigīn who had gone to the country between Multān and Jaisalmīr⁷ was taken prisoner with his family, and Tāju-d-Dīn Tālaqānī, the son-in-law of Malik Tigīn who had escaped from prison, was captured⁸ on the banks of the river Sarū, and Ubaid (the poet)⁹ also was captured in the same way in a wretched

And in the year 723 A. H. (1323 A.D.) Ulugh Khān for the second time marched towards Tilang; and Rāi Ladar Mahādeo again shut himself up in the fort.

Ulugh Khān gained possession of both the outer and inner citadels¹ by force of arms, and took the Rāi prisoner together with his family and followers, and leaving commissioners there drew off his army to Jājnagar² and Bīdar,³ and having taken as spoil many elephants and other property with jewels and valuables without number [sent them] to Dihli [and despatched Rāe Ladhar also to the capital and having given to Arankal the name of Sultānpūr] returned to Dihli.⁴

his neck, and accompanied by all his elephants into the royal presence at the Court.

Sultān Tughlaq Shāh taking Bahādur Shāh with him, victorious and triumphant returned to Dihlī, and proceeding by double stages made forced marches. Ulugh Khān upon hearing this news gave immediate orders for the erection of a lofty and noble palace near Afghānpur which is at a distance of three krohs from Tughlaqābād. It was completed in three days, so that Sultān Tughlaq Shāh might alight there,¹ and having passed the night in it and having rested might depart thence at an auspicious moment and alight at Tughlaqābād.

225. The Sultān arrived there and Ulugh Khān having gone out to meet him with all the nobles and grandees, spread a banquet of welcome. The Sultān gave orders for the elephants which he had brought with him from Bengal to be raced, and as the foundation of the New Palace was new and unsettled the palace began to shake and totter with the tramp of the elephants. When the people became aware that the Sultān was mounting with all haste, they hurriedly came out from the palace, without even washing their hands. The Sultān Tughlaq Shāh was engaged in washing his hands² and so did not come out. In consequence he washed his hands of life and the palace fell in upon him.³

We should not lose sight of the fact that from having built a palace such as this, which was quite unnecessary, there is a suspicion that Ulugh Khān may have built the palace⁴ without foundations¹ as was currently rumoured, but the author of the Tārīkh-i-Fīroz Shāhī makes no mention of this although this may possibly be due to a desire to flatter Fīroz Shāh and out of regard for him.

This event took place in the year 725 A.H. (1325 A.D.) and the duration of the reign of Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Tughlaq Shāh was four years and some months.

Verse.

If thou placest the world beneath thy feet
Thou wilt not sleep at last in thine own place.

It is currently reported among the people of India that Sultān Ghiyāsu-d-Dīn Tughlaq, on account of the ill will he bore to Sultānu-l-Mashāikh, sent a message to the Shaikh while on the way to Lakhnauti to this effect, "After my arrival at Dihli, either the Shaikh will be (ruler) there or I."² The Shaikh replied, "Dihli is still some way off."³ This saying became proverbial from that day and gained currency.

The Tughlaq Nāma of Mīr Khusrū which was the latest of his works, was written in verse in honour of the Sultān and in obedience to his order.

The death of the Sultānu-l-Mashāikh and also of Mīr Khusrū occurred in the same year as has already been stated.

SULTĀN MUHAMMAD 'ĀDIL IBN TUGHLAQ SHĀH.

Two dervishes cannot sleep in one blanket; or again the proverb دو شمشیر در یک نیام نگنجد dū shamshīr dar yak nīām naganjand. Two swords will not go into one scabbard; as we say: There cannot be two kings in Brentford.

³ This is a well-known proverb and has come from the Persian into common use in Urdu, used to express the futility of an incompetent person attempting any task, or on an occasion of unnecessary haste. "It's a far cry to Loch Awe." Roebuck in his collection of Oriental proverbs does not give this as a Persian, but as an Urdū proverb. Its origin is clear from our author's statement.

Hamīd Lawikī, too, was raised to an exalted position and Malik Sartez obtained the title of Imādu-l-Mulk, Malik Khurram that of Zahīru-l-Juyūsh (Inspector of the Forces) Malik Pindār Khiljī was given the title of Qadr Khān, and Malik Izzu-d-Dīn Yahyā that of Ā'zamu-l-Mulk, the district of Satgānw being also confirmed to him.

They used to keep in constant readiness food and drink, betel-leaf⁶ and all provisions for hospitality; and in

² The period here mentioned of forty days is the same as that enjoined in olden times to the Israelites: thus we find in Genesis l. 8, speaking of the death of Jacob "the physicians embalmed Israel and forty days were fulfilled for him; for so are fulfilled the days of these which are embalmed; and the Egyptians mourned for him three score and ten days. But in Numbers xx. 29, we find that the congregation mourned for Aaron thirty days.

The period of three days only is enjoined on Muḥammadans, except in the case of widows who must perform the special ceremony of mourning called Ihdūd for four months and ten days. Among Hindūs the period of mourning is thirty days. (See Matthew, Mishkātu-l-Maṣābīh I. 389).

To European palates the bīrā is anything but pleasant, it has a pungent somewhat acrid taste. It is a powerful sialagogue.

The medicinal virtues of the Chavica betle are supposed to be great. The leaves smeared with mustard oil and applied hot to the chest in several layers are used as poultices in pulmonary catarrhs, or in painful affections of the liver. They are said also to arrest the secretion of milk when applied to the breasts. A form of cancer known as "betle-chewer's cancer" has been described by Dr. Elliott of Colombo.

The plant is said to be a native of Java whence it has been introduced. It grows best in a hot moist climate such as that of Lower Bengal where it is largely cultivated. (Drury, Useful Plants of India).

Bahādur was taken prisoner and brought before the Sultān and met his punishment. After that, Malik Bahrām Ība the adopted brother of Sultān Tughlaq raised a rebellion in Multān,² and put to death 'Alī Khatatī who had been sent from Dihli to summon him thither. The Sultān, in order to put down this rebellion, left Daulatābād for Dihli and thence by uninterrupted marches reached Multān. Bahrām having come out³ against him fought with him, but was defeated and eventually put to death, his head was brought to the Sultān who intended to set the blood of the Multānis flowing like rivers on account of his crime, but when the Shaikh-l-Islām Qutbu-l-'Ālam Shaikh Ruknu-l-Haqq wau-d-Dīn Quraishī,⁴ may God sanctify his holy resting place, having bared his venerable head presented himself at the Court of the Sultān and made intercession, the Sultān pardoned the offences of the people.

The year assigned by him to this revolt in which Bahāu-d-dīn Gurshasp was defeated is 739 A.H. twelve years later than Badāoni's date, according to Briggs (I. 418). Narma Shirīn the Maghul,³ the brother of Qutlugh Khawāja the Maghul King of Khurāsān who had formerly invaded Hindūstān, having entered the Dihlī territory⁴ with an enormous army, reduced the majority of the forts,⁵ and proceeded slaughtering and taking captives from Lāhor and Sāmāna and Indarī to the borders of Badāon; and when the victorious troops of Islām came up with him, he retreated as they advanced; the Sultān pursued him⁶ as far as the frontier of Kālānor and defeated him, and leaving the destruction of that fort in the hands of Mujīru-d-Dīn Abūrijā returned in the direction of Dihlī. At this time the Sultān formed the opinion that in consequence of the refractory conduct of his subjects in the Doāb it was advisable to double the taxes levied on that country; he also instituted numbering their cattle and a house census, and other vexatious and oppressive measures, which were the cause of the complete ruin and desolation of the country,⁶ the weak were utterly destroyed and the strong laid the foundations of rebellion. The Sultān gave orders for the remainder of the inhabitants of Dihlī and the adjoining towns to start for Daulatābād, caravan by caravan, the houses were to be purchased from their owners, and the price of them to be paid in cash out of the public treasury, in addition to which large rewards were to be offered. 229. This state of affairs also led to a diminution of the public funds. Among other sources of loss to the treasury was this that the Sultān enacted that the *muḥar*¹ of copper should become current on an equal footing with the muḥar of silver, and any one who shewed reluctance to receive it used to be instantly punished severely. This enactment led to many corrupt practices in the kingdom as a matter of course, and unscrupulous and contumacious rascals used everywhere in their own houses to set up mints and stamp coins,² and taking them into the cities used to purchase with them silver and horses, weapons and fine things, and thus rose to great wealth and dignity. But inasmuch as copper had no value as a currency in places at a distance and one tanka of gold rose to the value of fifty or sixty copper coins, the Sultān perceived the worthlessness of the copper coinage, and issued an edict to the effect that every one who had in his house a copper tanka should, if he brought them to the public treasury, receive for them golden tankas in equal value.³ The people

² MS. (A) omits the word مس but it seems probable that this illicit coining was mainly confined to copper. Barnī states that the Hindūs of every province coined krors and laks of copper coins, so also Firishta.

³ The Persian text is: تنکهای زر برابر آن ببرد. This can hardly mean that for every copper tanka a golden tanka would be given, and yet the wording of the preceding line gives colour to this view. It runs as follows هر کس در خانه مس در خانه باشد "Every one who has in his house a copper tanka." Barnī's account is much the same, Firishta's is more explicit, but it is not clear whether the coins were exchanged at their relative metal value or their face value. It however is most probable that the copper tanka having profited greatly by this arrangement, till at last copper became copper and silver silver, and those copper tankas were lying in heaps in Tughlaqābād as late as the time of Sultān Mubārak Shāh according to the author of the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī, and had no more value than stones. God knows the truth.

And in the year¹ 738 A.H. (1337 A.D.) he despatched a force of eighty thousand² cavalry under eminent commanders to capture the mountain of Himāchal³ which stands between the country of Chīn and Hindustān, and which they also call Qarāchal⁴ with orders to leave garrisons in each successive place so that the line of communications for transport and supplies might remain open and the road of return might be easy. After the entry of this army into this country, by reason of the peculiar features of that mountain, on which heavy clouds form and rain pours in torrents at the sound of men's voices and their shouts and the neighing of horses, in consequence also of the narrowness of the been artificially pronounced equal in value to the silver tanka, was repurchased by the treasury at that same value, so that the dislocation of the currency and its consequent disasters are easily intelligible. See Elliott III. 240, Brigg's Firishta I. 415.

Although Brigg's translation leaves us in doubt as to this, the text of Firishta is perfectly clear on the subject: and we see that these copper tankas were issued as tokens with an artificial value, and it was when the Sultān found that the copper currency was distrusted by his people who found it was not received in foreign countries, that he hit upon the expedient of offering to exchange the copper tankas for silver or gold tankas, hoping thereby, as Firishta says, to rehabilitate the copper tanka, but the people were too wise for this, and threw the whole stock genuine and counterfeit alike upon the Treasury which was thus drained of gold and silver. Firishta (Bo. Ed. p. 239).

For a full account of this forced currency See Thomas Pathān Kings pp. 239, et seqq.

paths and the scarcity of fodder, the patrols were not able to stand to their posts, and the hill tribes getting the upper hand drove back the army, and falling upon the rear of the force killed many of them with poisoned arrows and stone showers, and sending the most of them to the eternal world enabled them to attain martyrdom, taking the rest prisoners.¹ For a long time they wandered helplessly among the mountains, and those who escaped after countless hardships the Sultān visited with condign punishment.² And after this calamity so great an army never gathered round the Sultān and all that money expended in their pay was thrown away.

230. And in the year 739 A.H. (1338 A.D.) Bahrām Khān Governor of Sunargānw died, and Malik Fakhrū-d-Dīn Silāhdār became rebellious and assumed the title of Sultān, and having fought with Qadr Khān the ruler of Lakhnautī in conjunction with Malik Husamu-d-Dīn Abūrijā the Mustaufī, and 'Izzu-d-Dīn Yahyā A'zamū-l-Mulk, was defeated, and all his sources of grandeur, his treasure and his retainers fell into the hands of Qadr Khān; and when the rainy season had arrived the horses belonging to Qadr Khān died, and he had collected much money³ and had stored it up in heaps in his own house with the object of presenting it to the Sultān. In spite of all that Husāmu-d-Dīn Aburjā could do to dissuade him from amassing wealth and inducing men to covet it and thus leading to disorder, Qadr Khān would not listen, till eventually the very result predicted by Husamu-d-Dīn ensued; Malik Fakhrū-d-Dīn returned, and the soldiery of Husāmu-d-Dīn joined him and killed their own master, and all the money fell to the lot of Fakhrū-d-Dīn. The absolute control of Sunārgānw was given him; he appointed one Mukhlis a servant of his, to Lakhnautī, and 'Alī Mubārak Inspector of Troops; Qadr Khān put Mukhlis to death and aspired at independence, writing diplomatic letters to the court of the Sultān. The Sultān appointed Malik Yūsuf, but he died by the way, and the Sultān, having other affairs to attend to, omitted to send any one else to that district.⁴

² According to Firishta all those who escaped were put to death by order of the Sultān.

At this juncture 'Alī Mubārak by reason of the enmity he bore to Fakhrū-d-Dīn, displayed the insignia of royalty, and assumed the title of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and Malik Ilyās Hājī who was a man of family and retinue, after a few days put 'Alāu-d-Dīn to death with the assistance of some of the Amīrs and Maliks of Lakhnautī, and himself assumed the title of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn.

And in the year 741 A.H. (1340 A.D.) Sultān Muḥammad having left with the object of reducing Sunārgānw, seized Fakhrū-d-Dīn and brought him prisoner to Lakhnautī, where he put him to death and returned. Shamsu-d-Dīn became absolute monarch of that region, and the kingly power and authority over that country descended for a lengthened period in the hands of his sons,¹ and never again returned to the possession of Sultān Muḥammad 'Ādil.

And in the year 742 A.H. (1341 A.D.) Saiyyid Ḥasan Kaithalī the father of Malik Ibrāhīm a fefee of the Sultān, who was generally known as Ḥasan Kāngū, and who eventually obtained the sovereignty of the Deccan with the title of 'Alāu-d-Dīn Bahman Shāh, fermented a revolt in Ma'bar on the grounds of the severity of the Sultān's governors, and the innovations introduced in the laws, and the number of executions,² and gained over to his own party nearly all the great men of Dihlī who had been appointed to that district. He put to death the leaders of the opposite party. The Sultān proceeded from Lakhnautī to Deogir for the purpose of quelling that disturbance, and on his arrival at Tilang was taken ill, and was forced to return by uninterrupted marches to Dihlī. He left Qutluḡ Khān in Daulatābād; thus the rebellion in Ma'bar remained unchecked and Ḥasan's influence increased rapidly.

And in the year 743 (1342 A.D.) they put to death by treachery Malik Halājun and Kul Chander Khākhar and Malik Tātār Khurd, the Governor of Lāhore,³ and when Khwāja-i-Jahān came up against them,⁴ they came out to do battle with him, but the scoundrels suffered a severe defeat and were sorely punished.

And in the year 744 A.H. (1343 A.D.) the Sultān passing through Sanām and Sāmāna gave orders to the Saiyyids and all the Muslims in opposition to the advice of Ḥasan Kānkū, for a general massacre, but he kept the chief men of those districts in their posts, conveyed them to the suburbs of the city, and conferred upon them villages and districts, and bestowing many rich robes of honour, and purses of gold gave them a place of abode there; and when a general famine arose he issued an edict that any one who wished should proceed to the eastern part of Hindustān and spend the days of dearth and scarcity there, without let or hindrance, and in the same way if any person wishing to give up living in Daulatābād should return to Dihlī, no one would molest him. Moreover in that year so many people arrived in Hindustān from the countries of Khurāsān and 'Irāq and Samarqand, in the hope of receiving the bounty of the Sultān, that hardly any other races were to be seen in that country.

And in this year Ḥājī Sa'īd Ṣaṣarī¹ arrived from Egypt bearing the diploma of the Khalīfah² with a banner and a robe of honour, conferring upon the Sultān the title of Nāṣir-i-Amīr-i-Mū'minīn from the Khalīfah of the Abbāsides who were still extant. The Sultān ordered decorations and illuminations in the city, and proceeded with all the Shaikhs and Saiyyids and his retainers to give him an honourable reception, then, dismounting, he kissed the feet of Ḥājī Sa'īd and joined his retinue. He then re-established the Friday prayers and the 'Īd, which all this time he had kept in abeyance waiting for the orders and sanction of the Khalīfah, he read the Khuṭbah in the name of the Khalīfah, and struck out the names of those kings who had not received authority from the Dār-ul-Khilāfah, with the exception of Sultān Maḥmūd. He then gave *largesse*³ of money and valuables to such an extent that his treasury became exhausted, he also despatched to Egypt a precious jewel, the like of which he had not in his treasury, by the hands of Hāji Barq'aī, with other rarities and presents; and having become, in his own opinion, the rightful Khalifah, and keeping constantly placed before him the Qur'ān¹ and the honorary presents and the patent of the Khalifah, would issue commands as though he were the Khalifah, and used to say 233. "The Khalifah says" this or that. He compelled the people to profess allegiance to the Khalifah, and went to Sarkdawārī which is in the vicinity of Shamsābād, and on two or three occasions² in Barūj and Kanbhāyat also³ he received patents from the Khalifah, and a second time the Makhdūmzāda-i-Baghdādi⁴ came to visit him, and the Sultān went on foot to Pālam to receive him; and when he saw him from afar off he advanced to meet him, and seated him upon the throne beside himself and made over to him without reservation, the city of Kili⁵ with the garden and the palace and all the buildings.

And in the year 745 A. H. (1344 A.D.) Malik Nizāmu-l-Mulk governor of Karra, raised a rebellion, Shahr-u-llah the brother of 'Ainu-l-Mulk brought up an army against him from Oudh and took him prisoner, but the rebellion was quelled. Then Shihābu-d-dīn Sultān waxed riotous in Bidar, and Qutlugh Khān was despatched against him, and Shihābu-d-dīn coming out with his son to do battle was besieged in the fortress, and Qutlugh Khān inducing him to come out by promises of quarter, sent him to the royal presence.

And in the year 746 A.H. (1345 A.D.) 'Alī Sher sister's son to Zafar Khān 'Alā'i gained possession of Gulbarga⁶ in strong force, having put to death the ruler of Bidar, and taking much spoil, fought with Qutlugh Khān, but was defeated and obliged to retreat to the fortress of Bidar where he shut himself up. Qutlugh Khān however took him also prisoner, and sent him to Sarkdawārī which was the camp of the Sultān's army. The Sultān in the first instance sent the captives to Ghaznī in exile, but afterwards recalled them thence and put them all to death.

234. And in the year 747 A.H. (1346 A.D.) at the time when the Sultān had made Sarkdawārī his camp, 'Ainu-l-Mulk arrived at the Court, bringing from Zafarābād and Oudh much property and rarities of great value as presents; then the Sultān came to the conclusion that it was advisable to recall Qutlugh Khān from the Dakkan, and send 'Ainu-l-Mulk to replace him. 'Ainu-l-Mulk got some idea into his head, and fled by night from Sarkdawārī and crossing the river Ganges made for Oudh, and his brother Shahrullāh laid hands upon certain of the elephants and horses¹ belonging to the king, which had been left behind to graze, and carried them off. The Sultān went in pursuit of them as far as Qanauj, and 'Ainu-l-Mulk, at the instigation of his brothers and a party of the followers of Malik Firoz Nāib Barbak, who had been placed in charge of the elephants and horses, crossed the river Ganges and coming over to this side² attacked the army of the Sultān, and like the thieves and Gawārs (of India)³ took to the woods and fought on foot, but not being able to stand against the elephants and archers of the king took to flight,⁴ and Shahrullāh and his other brother together with the majority of the sirdārs of 'Ainu-l-Mulk were drowned, and the remainder fell by the swords of the soldiers, and the fugitives were taken prisoners by the Gawārs, who having found 'Ainu-l-Mulk alive took him on their shoulders⁵ and brought him bareheaded⁶ to the court and gave him a few days respite,⁷ and the Sultān in consideration of his excellent services gave him his freedom, and in accordance with his former custom treated him well, and giving him a district sent him back to Dihli; then he recalled Qutlugh Khān from the Dakkan, but inasmuch as Qutlugh Khān had reduced that country to excellent order and had gained the good will of the people, his recall was the cause of great discontent (and disaffection)¹ and 'Aziz Khumār² who was one of the canaille, proceeding to Mālwa put to death many centurions (or Amirs of a hundred) which is the meaning of the word Yūzbāshī³ in accordance with the Sultān's orders, and thence arose many insurrections.

And in the year 748 A.H. (1347 A.D.) the captains of hundreds, stirred up rebellion and sedition in Gujrāt against Muqbil the servant of Khwāja-i-Jahān who was nāib-vazīr of Gujrāt, and was bringing treasure to the Court, and attacked him by night; getting possession of the treasure and horses and property belonging to the king. The Sultān arrived at Gujrāt with the object of quelling this rebellion, and sent some of the trustworthy Amirs as for instance Malik 'Alī Sarjāndār, and Aḥmad Lāchin to Daulatābād to bind the Amirs of hundreds who were there and bring them to Court. As soon as Malik Aḥmad Lāchin arrived at the pass of Manikganj, the Amirs of hundreds in their alarm⁴ came to a common understanding, and put Malik Aḥmad Lāchin to death; Aziz Khumār who had gone from Gujrāt to oppose the Amirs of hundreds of Dabho'i⁵ and Baroda, on coming face to face with the insurgents lost his head,⁶ fell from his horse and was taken prisoner. This news had reached the Sultān and had augmented his wrath considerably. And after the defeat of Muqbil and the murder of 'Aziz, the Amirs of hundreds waxed bold, and sent for their families and relations from all directions, and with one consent turned against the Sultān⁷ and having captured the fortress of Daulatābād from the the governors of Malik 'Alam took possession of it, and raising to the throne one Isma'il Fath gave him the title of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn. After this the Amīrs of hundreds of Dabho'i and Baroda over whom the Sultān had appointed other Amīrs, being defeated by the army opposed to them joined hands with the Amīrs of hundreds of Daulatābād. When the Sultān went to Daulatābād Isma'il Fath prepared to give him battle, but being defeated shut himself up in the fortress of Dhārānagar by which is meant the citadel¹ of Daulatābād; many Muslims of Daulatābād were slain in this rebellion, or were made prisoners, and Malik² 'Imādu-l-Mulk Sartez was ordered to pursue³ the fugitive Amīrs of hundreds towards Bīdar. In the meantime tidings arrived of the rebellion in Gujrāt of Malik Taghī, who, having put to death Malik Muẓaffar the governor of that place, had obtained possession⁴ of a large number of horses and much property. Thereupon the Sultān leaving in Dhārānagar Malik Janhar and Khudāwandzāda Qiwāmu-d-Dīn and Shaikh Burhānu-d-Dīn Balārāmī⁵ left to quell the rebellion of Taghī;⁶ the army which had fled from Daulatābād under the leadership of Ḥasan Kāngū, coming out of hiding attacked⁷ 'Imādu-l-Mulk Sartez. 'Imādu-l-Mulk was slain, and his army fled to Daulatābād and sought shelter there, and Malik Janhar with Khudāwandzāda Qiwāmu-d-Dīn and the other Amīrs not being able to withstand Ḥasan in Daulatābād evacuated those districts and made for Dhārānagar. Ḥasan Kāngū pursued them and came to Daulatābād,⁸ and having driven out Isma'il Fath assumed the title of 'Alāu-d-Dīn and usurped the government, and from that time forward the rule of the districts of Daulatābād and the sovereignty of that kingdom remained in his family. the rebel, after the arrival of the Sultān at Gujrāt, ventured a second time to fight with him and was again defeated, and giving himself up to brigandage roamed about from place to place, the Sultān however continued to pursue him and followed him wherever he went. And in this expedition the Sultān having sent for Malik Firoz from Dihlī attached him to his Court; and ¹ in this year Malik Gīr the son of Malik Qubūl Khālifatī, to whom the Sultān had delegated the control of all his important affairs, and on whose behalf he had written a letter expressing submission to the Egyptian Khalifah, and had sent it by the hand of Hājī Barqa'ī, died, and Aḥmad Aiyāz, who is also called Khwāja-i-Jahān, and Malik Qabūl Qiwāmu-l-Mulk were carrying on the government in Dihlī. Towards the end of the reign of Muḥammad, disaffection and rebellion, mischief and sedition became increasingly evident day by day,² so that if he turned his attention to curing one evil, another was not wanting to supply its place,³ and matters were past all remedy,⁴ and the glory⁵ of the kingdom, and prosperity⁶ of the country was entirely subverted. Tyranny supplanted equity, and infidelity flourished in place of Islām. There were many reasons for this, which by their co-operation led to ruin and dissension, and the decline of the kingdom. These causes are given in detail in the original history⁷ the Fīrozshāhī, and also in the Mubārakshāhī. The results are here given in brief arranged under seven heads. Firstly.—The greater part of the people and inhabitants of the towns and districts were ruined by the rapine of Tarma Shirīn, and never again recovered their prosperity. Secondly.—The tribute to be paid by the inhabitants of the Doāb, which district comprises some of the chief towns of Hindustān, was increased from ten per cent. to twenty per cent., besides which there was the numbering of the cattle, and the house-census, and other taxes ¹ over and above these, and ² in this way the more needy portion of the people left their property and cattle and attached themselves ³ to the richer folk, while the wealthier subjects plotted rebellion and sedition and took to highway robbery, and pillaged the country in all directions ⁴ so that from all these causes the revenue of the country began to dwindle.⁵ Thirdly.—An universal famine, and (consequent) dearness of grain, for it so happened that for seven whole years not a single drop of rain fell from heaven. It should be remembered that this statement has been copied as it stands from the Mubārakshāhī, but I cannot say whether the author of that work has been guilty of exaggeration or if in reality the facts were as stated.⁶ Fourthly.—the desertion of Dihli, and the population of Daulatābād, because after Dihli was laid waste they brought people from the towns and other places into that city and populated it, and then again removed them thence to Daulatābād, so that all their hereditary estates and family holdings, and all the property and effects⁷ they possessed were wasted and dissipated, so that they never saw anything more of them. Fifthly.—The massacre of the eighty thousand cavalry in a body in the hills of Himāchal, and the consequent desolation of their families. Sixthly.—The daily occurrence of rebellion and mutiny in every place where people were in dread of their lives, some of them fell in battle but the greater number were put to death with their families upon false charges, so that in every way that wretched country was being ruined. Seventhly.—The blood thirsti-ness of the Sultān, and his system of Government of his people, which made Saiyyids, 'Ulamā, Shaikhs, ragamuffins and scoundrels, artisans,¹ peasants,² and soldiers, all alike in his eyes. Moreover there was constantly in front of his royal pavilion and his Civil Court a mound of dead bodies and a heap of corpses, while the sweepers and executioners were wearied out with their work of dragging (the wretched victims) and putting them to death in crowds. So that³ the people were never tired of rebelling nor the king of punishing (the rebels).⁴ At last the Sultān was at his wit's end what to do, but for all this he did not keep his foot out of the stirrup, nor did his sword rest from punishment, but all to no purpose, till the flood of sedition waxed violent, and the nobles of the kingdom by degrees grew⁵ feeble, at length disease overcame him, and the Sultān was freed from his people and the people from their Sultān.

They relate an extraordinary story of one of the irregular acts of the Sultān which was that he kept such strict watch over all matters involving punishment, that he used to keep four Muftis⁶ to whom he allotted quarters in the precincts of his own palace, and used to see that they kept to their appointed places,⁷ so that when any one who was arrested upon any charge, he might in the first place argue with the Muftis about his due punishment, so far as he was able,¹ and had said, Be very careful that you do not fail in the slightest degree by defect in speaking that which you consider right, because if any one should be put to death wrongfully and the oversight should have been on your side, the blood of that man will be upon your head. Then if after long discussion they convicted (the prisoner), even though it were midnight² he would pass orders for his execution,³ and if he himself found for conviction⁴ he would refer it to another meeting, and would endeavour to find a means of upsetting their arguments,⁵ and would come and make a speech, and when the Muftis were at a loss for a further argument, he would put (the prisoner) to death on the instant or else release him on the spot.

They say⁶ that one day Sultān⁷ Muḥammad wearing his shoes went on foot into the Court of Justice⁸ of Qāzī Kamālu-d-Dīn Ṣadr-i-Jahān and said, The Shaikhzāda-i-Jāmī has called me a tyrant, send for him that he may substantiate his charge of tyranny against me, or, if he fails, that you may pronounce⁹ against him the sentence of such punishment according to law as the case may require. When the Shaikhzāda was summoned he confessed (to having said it) and the Sultān enquired (what his grounds were). He replied, every one whom you punish (with death) lawfully or unlawfully, that is your prerogative, but that you should hand over his wife and children to the executioners as you do, to do what they will with them, in what religion and under what sacred law do you find this? The Sultān was silent and rose up from the Court,¹⁰ and ordered that the Shaikhzāda should be bound; this order was carried out and he was put into an iron cage; then he had him carried in that very way on the journey to Daulatābād on the back of an elephant. When he returned and arrived at Dihlī, he brought him before the same Court,¹¹ and bringing him out of the cage gave orders in obedience to which the poor wretch was cut in two in his presence. From this it is clear that the Sultān was a mixture of opposites, and¹² for this reason his name has been handed

حمى دق هي ان يتشبت الحرارة الخارجة عن الطبع بالأعضاء الاصلية خصوصا القلب تفني رطوبات البدن و اقل هي حرارة غريبة تحدث للبدن بواسطة حدوثها في اعضائه -

The fever called "Diqq" is when the heat which arises from the constitution seizes upon the chief essential organs, especially the heart, and the moisture of the body disappears. Another opinion is that this is an extraneous fever which attacks the body by means of its generation in some of its members.

The Burhān-i-Qāti' states that it is called دق because it emaciates the body.

Sadīdī's account is as follows. The fever حمى الدق is usually fatal,.....It is either simple or complicated with putrid fever. The signs of this complication are persistence of the fever, with an exacerbation on the day of the paroxysm of the putrid fever, shivering is also present. The worst complication of all is (he says) when "diqq" is complicated with one of the fevers which require treatment by purges, because the treatment of "diqq" is the opposite to this.

The pulse in uncomplicated "diqq" is hard, frequent, and slender.....The surface of the body is not very hot at the first feel, but after a few moments it feels scorching, hottest of all over the arteries, the heat increases especially in the face and upper parts of the body.

Food should be nourishing.....Some unskilful physicians withhold food and kill the patient speedily. Food should be moist and cooling. If the fever passes on to the degree called ذبول zabūl the pulse increases in hardness and tenuity, the eyes change and become covered with sordes, the cartilages of all the bones are prominent, the temples sink in, the skin of the forehead tightens, the skin loses its lustre, and has a dusty appearance, the eyelids become heavy; all this is the result of rapid dissolution, and the abundance of dryness and disappearance of the natural moisture. There hope of exterminating him set out for the kingdom of Thatha where ¹ Taghī had fled for safety; and ² in that expedition Qarghan Nāib of the king of Khurāsān sent Altūn Bahādur with five thousand cavalry to assist the Sultān. The Sultān's illness was at that time slightly less urgent ³ and when he arrived at Thatha he fasted on the day of the 'Āshūra,⁴ which was in the very middle of the hot season, and after breaking his fast he ate some fish, whereupon his illness returned, and on the twenty-first of Muḥarram in the year 752 H. also appears in the urinary excretion, oiliness and a scaly deposit; the nose becomes sharp, the hair grows long, and lice are of frequent occurrence on the body because of the excessive amount of exhalation. The abdomen falls in till it touches the backbone, the skin of the chest is also retracted, and the nails become long (اچذبت الاظفار) then the diarrhoea recurs, the hair falls out and death occurs.

It will be observed that there is no mention here of any of the lung symptoms of Phthisis, all that we have described is a continued fever of remittent type running a moderately long course as is shown by the symptoms described. No mention is made of any eruption, nor is diarrhoea apparently more than an intercurrent symptom appearing late in the disease.

This was probably one of the fevers so common in India for which for want of a better name "typho-malarial" has been suggested.

Probably the complication of "diqq" with "putrid fever" of which Sadīdī speaks was more comparable to the "enteric fever" of modern science. Sadīdī speaks elsewhere of three degrees of severity of this fever. The first is called "diqq" the second more severe is called zabūl and the most severe of all is called "hashf."

I have only been able to epitomise Sadīdī's account which will be found at pages 427-428 of his work. (Al Muḡnī fī Sharḥ il Mūjaz).

Some of the Muftis informed the Sultān of this, and his orders were that those two, master and disciple³ were to be taken in confinement from Dihli and brought to the camp. This was carried out,⁴ and Malik Fīroz in some way or other gained over the guards, and made his way, just as he was, to the neighbourhood of Hānsī to Shaikh Badru-d-Dīn who was one of the descendants of Shaikh Jamālu-d-Dīn of Hānsī⁵ may God sanctify their resting-places. At Sarsutī tidings arrived of the birth of Shāhzāda Faṭḥ Khān,² whose son eventually became Tughlaq Shāh, and the news of the death³ of Taghī 'Lāghī also reached him there from Gujrāt; and on the second of Rajab in the aforesaid year, he graced the throne of Dihlī by his accession and made a fresh distribution of appointments.

³ Fīrozābād. This must not be confounded with the Fīrozābād which arose from the change of name of Panḍūah, see Elliott, III. 295, and Panḍūah, Imp. Gaz. Vol. XI.

This Fīrozābād (see J. A. S. B., 1870), was situated five kos (ten miles) from Dihlī, and included according to Shams-i-Sirāj 'Afīf, eighteen places, the qasba (townships) of Indarpat and others a list of which will be found in Elliott, III. 303. At page 298 will also be found an account of the founding of the city of Hissār (Hiṣār Fīrozah) and of the construction of two canals leading to it one from the Sutlej and the other from the Jumna. The modern representation of the latter canal, which was called Rajīwah, is found in the Western Jumna Canal passing through Karnāl (see Hunter's Imp. Gaz., Vol. VII. 258 for an account of this canal). The canal leading from the Sutlej was called Alagh Khāni (Ulugh Khānī). In modern maps there is a trace of this canal, but it is called the Jureah canal, which is probably the word Rajīwah converted and applied in error to this canal. Rennell's map (Tieff. Vol. III) shows the supposed canal of Fīroz Shāh, and it is evident from our author's statement that this canal was commenced not from the Hissār end but from Dīpālpūr, which lay at the junction of the Biās and Sutlej on the banks of the Biās, and passed south-east near Fathabad, if not actually through it, to join the river Jahjar, which in Rennell's map is called the Jidjer, its nearest point measured from Dīpālpūr being exactly 100 miles (forty-eight kroh) on this map, whereas the town of Jhajhar Lat. 28° 16' N. Long. 77° 42' 15" E. is 200 miles (Hunter's Imp. Gaz., Vol. VII. 195). (The river Jahjar flowed south-east through Fatehpūr joining the Jumna near Etawah). For this reason it appears likely that the canal was led not to Jhajhar but into the river Jajhar as above stated. (See Bo : Firishṭa, Text I. 263).

Shams-i-Sirāj 'Afīf makes no mention of Dīpālpūr in connection with any canal, and there is one difficulty in his account as he says that both the canals, the Rajīwah and Ulugh Khānī, were conducted through the vicinity of went to Dipālpūr and bringing a canal from the river Satlaj¹ led it as far as the Jahjar which is forty-eight kroh from there.

In the year 757 A.H. (1356 A.D.) he conducted a stream from the river Jamna from the vicinity of Mandūi (Mandilī) and 245. Sarūr,² and having led seven other canals into it took it to Hānsī

Karnāl. If this was so the "supposed canal of Fīroz Shāh" in Rennell's map cannot be the Ulugh Khānī. His words are as follows:—

دهانه این هردو جوی از اتصال کرنال بیرون آورده میان هشتاد کروه کروه
 در شهر حصار فیروزه برده -

Dahāna-i īn har do jū az ittisāl i karnāl birūn āwarda miyān i hashtād kroh kroh dar shahr i Hīṣar Fīrūza burda.

It is not to be supposed that Fīroz Shāh would take his canal from Dipālpūr to Karnāl when his objective was Hissār; we have also Badāoni's clear statement that a canal was brought from the Sutlej and led as far as the Jahjar, this canal would coincide with the line of that shewn in Rennell's map, but not with that of Shams-i-Sirāj.

The canal mentioned in the next paragraph is evidently the one to which Shams-i-Sirāj 'Afīf refers (Elliott, III. 299-300), although it is not very evident what the exact course of this canal was: I can find no trace of any places named Mandūi (Mandilī) or Surūr anywhere in the maps, while Rās mentioned here by Badāoni must be what 'Afīf calls Great Larās, as he states that it was in the neighbourhood of Great Larās that Sulṭān Fīroz built the city of Hīṣar Fīroza. (Elliott, p. 299). Rennell (memoir p. 72, quoting from Dow I. 327 has Beraisen, which is a mistaken reading of bi Rāsain in the original, that is to say the two Rāses, Great Larās and Little Larās.

It would seem that there were in all three canals to Hīṣar Fīroza, one from Dipālpūr to Hissār and on to the Jahjar, this was brought from the Sutlej. A second from the Jumna as far as Karnāl (Rajīwah). A third from the Sutlej as far as Karnāl (Ulugh Khānī). At Karnāl according to 'Afīf's account these two last joined. The only way this can have been possible is by the courses of the Sutlej and Jumna being very different from their present courses or even from the beds of these rivers in 1782 when Rennell made his map.

By bringing the Sutlej further south-east near to the course of the Ghaggar say near to Thanesar, we should have a point from which we can understand that it would have been advantageous to bring water from both the Sutlej and Jumna viā Karnāl.

The whole of Hindustān was now in possession of Sultān Fīroz with the exception of Lakhnautī which was held by Ḥājī Ilyās,⁹ who had come to terms with the Sultān,¹⁰ and with the exception also of the Deccan, which, after the death of Sultān Muḥammad, had come into the possession of Hasau Kāngū.

And in the year 759 H. (1358 A.D.) having gone to Samānā, he appointed Malik Qabūl *Sarbardadār*¹ to proceed against² the Mughuls who had arrived on the frontier of Dipālpūr. The Mughuls upon hearing particulars of the Sultān's army turned back and went to their own country, and the Sultān returned to Dihlī;³ and in this year the Sultān despatched some Arabian horses and foreign fruits⁴ with all kinds of choice presents by the hands of the messengers of Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn of Lakhnauti who had arrived at his Court bearing many presents,⁵ and at Bihār they heard that the Sultān Shamsu-d-Dīn had died, and Sultān Sikandar his son had ascended the throne in the room of his father, so they sent the horses in accordance with orders to the Court at Bihār and conducted the messengers back to Karra.

Saiyyid Rusūldār was sent with the messengers of Lakhnauti⁸ to the Sultān Sikandar at Lakhnauti, and Sikandar despatched five fine elephants with other costly presents and offerings to the Court. Accordingly they made an iced sharbat with several elephant and camel loads of cane-sugar which was carried with Sultān Firūz, and he ordered them to read the whole of the Qur'ān for the soul of Sultān Maḥammad and distribute the sharbat among the entire army. Among those translators 'Izzu-d-Dīn Khālid Khānī,² who was one of the poets and mūnshīs of the time of Fīrūz wrote in verse a translation of a book on the risings and settings of the seven planets, and their good and evil import, and of auguries and omens. Its name is called up to the present day³ Dalāil-i-Fīrūzī, and the author of this Muntakhab read it in Lāhor in the year 1000 H. (1591-92 A.D.) from beginning to end. It is moderately good, neither free from beauties nor defects; and I saw some other books before that also which were translated in the name of Sultān Fīrūz, some of them on the Science of "Pingal"⁴ that is to say on Music, and the kinds of *Akhāra*⁵ which they call Pātur bāzī, and some on other subjects. I found most of them to be profitless, and their paucity of interest is for the most part due to the triviality of their subject matter, and the difficulty of explaining it, as is evident.

Khān-i-jahān the Vazir, died, and his son Jūnā Shāh obtained that title;⁵ and the book Chandāban⁶ which is a Maṣnavī in the Hindī language relating the loves of Lūrak and Chāndā, a lover and his mistress, a very graphic work, was put into verse in his honour by Maulānā Dā'ūd. There is no need for me to praise it because of its great fame in that country, and Makhdūm Shaikh⁷ Taqīu-d-Dīn Wāiz Rabbānī used to read some occasional poems of his from the pulpit,⁸ and the people used to be strangely influenced by hearing them, and⁹ when certain learned men of that time asked the Shaikh¹⁰ saying, what is the reason for this Hindī Maṣnavī being selected? he answered, the whole of it is divine truth and pleasing in subject, worthy of the ecstatic contemplation of devout lovers, and conformable to the interpretation of some of the Āyats of the Qur'ān, and the sweet singers of Hindūstān. Moreover by its public recitation human hearts are taken captive.

¹¹ According to Firishṭa, Zafar Khān died in 775 H. and was succeeded by his elder son Daryū Khān.

Then in the year 776 H. (1374-75 A.D.) an event distressing to the people (death) happened to Fath Khān; and in this year Shamsu-d-Dīn Dāmaghāni having obtained the yellow girdle and the Chandol of silver, that is to say, the palanquin of honour, was appointed governor of Gujrāt in place of Zafar Khān; and since he had boasted when accepting the post on his departure, that he would send to the Court every year a hundred splendid elephants, two hundred Arab horses, and four hundred slaves, *Muqaddam-zādas*¹ and Abyssinians, together with valuables and money, when
 251. he found that he could not perform his promises he was compelled to rebel.

And in the year 778 H. (1376-77 A.D.) the Amīrs of hundreds² of Gujrāt put him to death and sent his head to the Court; thus that rebellion was quelled, and thereafter Gujrāt was put under the control of Farḥatu-l-Mulk, otherwise known as Malik Mufarriḥ Sultāni.³

And in the year 779 H. (1377-78 A.D.) he marched towards Itāwa and Akchak⁴ and having sent the Rāis of these districts with their families to Dihlī, built many fortresses on these frontiers; then having left Firozpūr and Batlāhī,⁵ in charge of the son of Malik Tāju-d-Dīn, and having given Akchak to Malik Afghān returned to Dihlī. In this year also Malik Nizāmu-d-Dīn the ruler of Oudh, who was in attendance on the Sultān, died, and the governorship of that province devolved upon Malik Ṣaifu-d-Dīn his eldest son.

In the year 781 H. (1379 A.D.) having gone⁶ to Sāmāna and passing through Shāhābād and Ambāla, he came to the country at the foot of Sintūr hills,⁷ and receiving many presents from

And in the year 782 H. (1380 A.D.) he raised the standard for an expedition with the intention of taking vengeance on the Khūkhar Rāi Chief of Kaithar,⁵ who had invited and put to death by treachery both Saiyyid Muḥammad and Saiyyid 'Alāu-d-Dīn his brother,⁶ who were Governors of Badāon. The rebellious Khūkhar ⁷ fled towards the hills of Kumāon, accordingly after laying waste and plundering the whole of his country, he left Malik Khitāb the Afghān in the country of Sambhal⁸ to deal with the rebellion of Khūkhar, and turned back after having made over Badāon to Malik Qabūl; Qabūlpūra which at present is a quarter of Badāon lying outside the fort is called after his name; also he used to come every year for the purpose of sport and lay utterly waste the Kaithal⁹ country.

When thou reachest eighty or ninety years
Great is the vexation thou reapest from the world;
And going further when thou reachest the hundredth stage
Death will then be to thee a form of life.

The Shāhzāda, however, after that he had been in terror for some days and had omitted to pay his respects to the Sultān, one day in private⁷ came into the Sultān's presence and loyally told him the whole truth, and informed him also of the treacherous designs of Khān-i-Jahān, so that the tables were turned.⁸ Obtaining carte blanche from the Sultān to defeat and exterminate Khān-i-Jahān, and having brought over to his came with the Sipahsālār to Dibli; Muḥammad Shāh, returning from the hill country, with the great carelessness which characterises youth took no thought for avenging Sikanḍar Khān, but spent his time in enjoyment and luxury, so that the affairs of the kingdom fell into great disorder; and the Sultān's soldiery by reason of their enmity and jealousy against Samāu-d-Dīn and Kamālu d Dīn, who were the protégés of Muḥammad Shāh, set themselves up in opposition to them, and assembled in a spacious plain, and stoned and wounded Malik Zāhiru-d-Dīn Lāhorī whom the Shāhzāda had sent to admonish them. He came in that state before Muḥammad Shāh and informed him of what had happened, whereupon the Shāhzāda having collected forces set out to do battle with that party. The army of the Shāhzāda was victorious at first, and bore back the army of the Sultān, so that they took refuge with the Sultān Firūz. The battle raged fiercely for two days and when the Sultān's body servants found themselves in straits, they bore the Sultān, who was little more than a puppet, to the field of battle and displayed him there, and when the troops of Muḥammad Shāh and his elephant drivers set eyes upon Sultān Firūz they left fighting and came over to the Sultān. Muḥammad Shāh with the small following which remained to him, went towards the Sirmūr hills, and the army of the Sultān, which was near a hundred thousand cavalry and infantry, fell upon the camp of Muḥammad Shāh, and entering his private apartments sacked them and swept them away. The Sultān at the instigation of some interested persons, unwillingly deposed Muḥammad Shāh from his position as heir apparent, and conferring upon Tughlaq Khān¹ the son of Fath Khān, his grandson, the title of Tughlaq Shāh raised him to the position of heir-apparent. Tughlaq Shāh beheaded Mīr Ḥasan the son-in-law of the Sultān, who was a special favourite of Muḥammad Shāh, and having exiled Ghālib Khān the governor of Sāmān, sent him to the country of Bihār. He died in the year 599. H. and is buried at Sarkhāb of Tabrīz which has been called "the Sepulchre of the Poets." His poetry was held in great estimation. (Majma'ul-Fuṣṣḥā I. 330) see also Beale O. B. D., p. 286.

and in place of ربوده (snatched) in the last hemistich we should read فکند (thrown)] ;¹ and another is this verse

این مهل مهل بود که گوگرد صرخ خواست
گرنان خواجه خواستی آن را چه کردی

This was extremely easy, that he asked for red sulphur :²
If he had asked bread from the Khwāja, what could I have done ?

which was thus written,

این مهل مهل بود که آب حیات خواست

This would have been very easy had he asked for the water of life.

Another is in this verse,

گرمشک خواند خاک درت ز فلک صرنج
نرخ گم—ربط من خریدار نشکند

If the sky calls the dust of your door musk, do not grieve,
For the jewel's worth is not affected by the abuse of the purchaser.

The poet had written,

گر لعل خواند سنگ درت مشتری صرنج

257. If Jupiter calls the gravel at your door rubies, do not grieve.
And some of his poems also I have seen, but I remember none of them, and since Malik Ahmad was the real son of Amir Khusrū, and reminded them of his father, the King and his companions and the learned men of the age were greatly pleased with these imitations and thought them very valuable.

The verse would then read as follows :

زهی طپانچه قهرتو از طریق نفاق کلاه گوشه گرون فکند ز عیاری

² Gūgird-i-Ahmar (Sulphur). The red Gūgird is said to be a mineral of exceeding rarity which is only found in a mine in the Valley of the Ants; the ants of that region are the size of goats. It is said that at night a light is emitted from the mine which may be seen for many leagues, but when the mineral is taken out of the mine it does not possess this luminous property. It is an important ingredient in Al-Iksir (Elixir of life) and just as Quicksilver is called Abūl-arwāḥ (Father of spirits), they call this Abūl-ajsād (Father of bodies).

It has various beneficial qualities (Burhān-i-qāḍī.)

Another poet was Maulānā Maẓhar Karra,¹ whose descendants are still living in the city of Lakhnauti and have been highly thought of and respected from generations back. There is an anthology of his consisting of fifteen or sixteen thousand verses, but inasmuch as he was more of a Mulla than a poet, his poetry is not so highly esteemed by the learned, although were they to search, they would bring to light many a good thing in the way of purity (of expression).

Another (poet) is Qāzī 'Ābid² who wrote this poem—

My friends say, 'Ābid with this fine nature of yours
How is it that you have not written more poems and odes?
To whom shall I address poems and odes, since in our time
No suitable lover and no generous patron has arisen.

This is a translation of the following poem in Arabic—

They say, thou hast given up writing poems, I reply, yes!
perforce;

The door of claims and causes is closed.

The land is empty—there is no benefactor from whom to hope for favours, nor is there any beauty to love.

And the strange thing is that though no one will buy poetry
Still in spite of this they appropriate and steal it.

Muḥammad Shāh, with two thousand cavalry, crossed the river Jamna and entered the Doāb, and sent Humāyūn Khān his younger son to Sāmāna, and having obtained thence a great following and the requirements of sovereignty, and taking with him certain Amīrs of Hindustān with fifty thousand cavalry, a second time marched his standards towards Dihlī. As it chanced he became engaged in battle with Abū Bakr Shāh and was again defeated, and Abū Bakr Shāh pursued him part of the way, but considered it an excellent opportunity to return. Muḥammad Shāh arrived at Chaptar,³ which is a town on the banks of the Ganges, and giving over his following to destruction once more attempted to fight. And in the month of Muḥarram of the year 792 H. (1389-90 A.D.) Shāhzāda Humāyūn Khān having called together many Amīrs from the frontier of Sāmāna to reinforce him, laid waste the country round Dihlī, engaged in battle in the neighbourhood⁴ of Pānīpath with 'Imādu-l-Mulk who had been sent by Abū Bakr (Shāh)⁵ with four thousand cavalry to oppose him, and being defeated retreated towards Sāmāna. And in the month of Jamādīu-l Awwal of the aforesaid year Abū Bakr Shāh marched for Chaptar (Chītar) with a strong force, with the object of opposing Muḥammad Shāh, and had encamped at a distance of twenty kroh from Dihlī, when Muḥammad Shāh with four thousand men,¹ passing unobserved round his right flank,² reached Dihlī by another route and entered the palace of Humāyūn, where the populace both great and small declared in favour of him; Abū Bakr Shāh pursued him and arrived at Dihlī, and having put to death Malik Bahāu-d-Dīn Jangi whom Muḥammad Shāh had left to guard the gates, without hesitation made for the palace of Humāyūn, and Muḥammad Shāh, being taken off his guard, was not able to oppose him and leaving by way of the door of the Hanz-i-Khōṣṣ fled again with all haste to Chaptar (Chītar) his original abode and asylum.³ Many of his noted Amirs and of his body servants were put to death, and although Sultān Muḥammad Shāh was no longer able to stand against Abū Bakr Shāh, still⁴ the soldiery and people were very ill-disposed towards Abū Bakr Shāh, and in the month of Ramazān in the aforesaid year, Mubashir Chap and some of the slaves of Firūz Shāh's party who had been promoted to the rank of Amir, and for one reason or another bore a grudge against Abū Bakr Shāh, opened a secret correspondence⁵ with Muḥammad Shāh, and invited him; ⁶ Abū Bakr Shāh when he came to know of this was utterly dumbfounded, and under pretext of asking assistance from Bahādur Nāhir set his face to go to *Kotila*⁷ of Mīwāt, and set out leaving Malik Shāhīn and 'Imādu-l-Mulk and Malik Bahūī and Safdar Khān in Dihlī; then Muḥammad Shāh in obedience to the invitation of the Amirs entered Dihlī for the third time and ascended the throne of royalty in the palace of Firūzābād with great ceremony; and Mubashir Chap, 7 کوتکه kotla. Hindī कोटला koṭlā, a small fortress. Bahādur Nāhir was ruler of Mīwāt, see Firishṭa Briggs, 471. This word Kotla seems to have been made use of by Firūz Shāh to designate certain of his hunting palaces. See Thomas, Pathān Kings, p. 292, note 3, and references there given.

By this Kotila however, Kotila of Mīwāt, we may understand probably Hardwār or a town in its vicinity, which appears in Rennell's map G. n. as "Coupele" see Elliott, III 455. n. and 458.

having received the title of Islām Khān, was promoted to the rank of Vazīr, and after some time he left Firūzābād and went to the palace of Humāyūn, Jahān (Numā),¹ and gave orders for the slaves of the Firūzī party who had been a source of disturbance in the days of tumult and riot to be put to death without distinction, and many of the free men also, who came from the eastern quarters of Hindustān were taken for slaves by reason of the imperfection of their pronunciation,² and were put to the sword. Abū Bakr Shāh after this misfortune could not recover himself, and remained at the Kotila (of Miwāt) just as he was till Muḥammad Shāh³ by continuous marches came against him, and Bahādur Nāhir Miwātī and Abū Bakr Shāh who had taken refuge with him, after fighting for a long time begged for quarter and had an interview with Sultān Muḥammad Shāh. Bahādur Nāhir received a robe of honour and other marks of favour, but they imprisoned Abū Bakr Shāh in the fort of Mirath. In that self-same prison he escaped from the prison house of the world. This event took place in the year 793 H. (1390-91 A.D.)⁴ the duration of the reign of Abū Bakr Shāh was a year and a half.

² This passage is not intelligible in itself, but Firishta's account explains it fully. He tells us that many of these slaves claimed to be natives of the country and not foreigners, whereupon Muḥammad Shāh imposed upon them the pronunciation of certain words, and those who failed in their pronunciation of this 'Shibboleth' were treated as foreigners and put to death. He writes,

ناصرالدين محمد شاه فرمود كه هر كه از شما كهرا كهري گويد اصيل است
و چون بطوريكه پادشاه ميخواست تلفظ نميتوانستند نمود و بزبان مردم پورب

و بنگاله ادا ميکردند کشته ميشدند - Firishta Bo. text p. 267.

Muḥammad Shāh said "whoever among you instead of Kharā says Kharī, is a native of the country," and since (as the King in fact desired) they were not able to pronounce these words, but followed the pronunciation of people of the East and of Bengal they were put to death.

The word Khārī signified brackish as applied to water: natives of Eastern Bengal however use the word Khārā in place of Khārī, using the word as if it were an adjective agreeing with the masculine word pānī, water.

And in the month of Muḥarram in the year 797 H. (Nov. 1394 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd was induced by the deceitfulness of certain friends of Muqarrab Khān to leave Sa'adat Khān, to enter the fort and come to terms with Muqarrab Khān, who thus obtained the assistance he needed. The following day Muqarrab Khān and Sa'adat Khān met on the field of battle, and Muqarrab Khān being defeated again entered the fort. The quarrel lasted for some three months, with frequent engagements between the besiegers and the besieged, when recognizing that this was all due to Sa'adat Khān Bārbak, Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Maḥmūd Shāh at the instigation of his intimates entered the city upon a favourable opportunity in the month of Muḥarram 797 H., and came to terms with Muqarrab Khān, who on the following day started from Dihlī to fight against Sa'adat Khān, but was defeated and forced to return to the city." Sultān Maḥmūd was known as King in Dihlī, while in Fīrūz-ābād Nuṣrat Shāh enjoyed that title,⁴ and Muqarrab Khān placed the citadel of old Dihlī under the command of Bahādur Nāhir Mīwātī, and bestowed upon Malloo Khān⁵ the title of Iqbāl Khān,⁶ and day by day battles were fought between these two kings,⁷ who were like the two kings in the game of chess.⁸ Sultān Nuṣrat Shāh retained possession of the country of the Doāb, and Sanbhul, Pānīpath, Rohtak, and Jahjar,⁹ while a few old ruined forts such as Dihlī and Sīrī and the rest, remained in the hands of Sultān Maḥmūd, and from that time forward this proverb became a common expression: The rule of the Lord of the world (Khudāwand-i-‘Ālam) is from Dihlī to Pālam.¹⁰ And all over Hindustān there arose various parties each with its own Malik.¹¹

In this way, its Mongol sense, it is used, he tells us by Rashīd-d-Dīn. He also tells us that Kurkān or Gurgān represents the Chinese expression Fu-mā and that the Amīr Tīmūr was called Tīmūr Fu-mā by the Chinese, because he married the daughter of Chun-ti, the ninth and last Emperor of the Mongol dynasty. Fu-mā in fact means "son-in-law" in Chinese, when applied to princes, and thus is a translation of the Mongol word."

On the third day from this Iqbāl Khān made a sudden attack in strong force upon Nuṣrat Shāh hoping to take him by surprise; Nuṣrat Shāh fled from Jahānumā and came to Firūzābād,³ and leaving there crossed the Jamna and went to join Tātār Khān his Vazīr at Pānīpath. The whole⁴ of the army and elephants of Nuṣrat Shāh fell into the hands of the astute Iqbāl Khān, and for two whole months daily battles were fought between Muqarrab Khān and Iqbāl Khān, until by the intervention of certain Amirs peace was established between these two leaders; but after a few days⁵ Iqbāl Khān proceeded against Muqarrab Khān,⁶ and without warning suddenly surrounded him and besieged him; and after giving him assurances of safety raised him to the dignity of martyrdom, and getting Sultān Maḥmūd into his power made a puppet of him and took the management of the state into his own hands. Then in the month of Zū Qa'dah of the aforesaid⁷ year Iqbāl Khān wrested Pānīpath by force from the followers of Tātār Khān, and seized all his baggage and his elephants and army. Tātār Khān previously to this expedition of Iqbāl Khān, had left Pānīpath with the intention of attempting to reduce Dihlī but found himself quite unequal to the task, and throwing his country⁸ to the winds left Dihlī and went to Gujrāt with a large following to join his father.⁹ Iqbāl Khān coming to Dihlī bestowed upon Malik Naṣiru-l-Mulk, a relation of Tātār Khān who had joined him, the title of 'Ādil Khān, and placed under his control the district of the Doāb.

Tīmūr the Great attacked the town of Tulumba,¹ and taking Multān, put to the sword² the whole of the prisoners of the army of Sārang Khān whom Mirzā Pir Muḥammad had kept in confinement; proceeding thence by continuous marches he also took the fort of Bhat,³ and having taken prisoner Rāi Jaljīn⁴ Bhatī put him to death together with the garrison and inhabitants of the fort.

Leaving there⁵ and taking Sāmāna, he put to death crowds of fugitives from Dipālpūr and Ajūdhan and Sarsutī,⁶ who were helplessly fleeing in all directions in terror of their lives, and taking large numbers of them prisoners he took them along with him, and covering great distances he crossed the river Jamna, and entered the Doāb,⁷ and sweeping the greater part of the country

Firishṭa says. "Arrived at a place where the river of Jamū and the Chenāb meet where there was a strong fortress called 'Talanbha.'" Briggs says "to the conflux of the Chunab with the Ravy."

From Tulumba Firishṭa tells us Tīmūr marched to Shāhnawāz where they took all the grain they required and burned the remainder. From thence he went to Ajūdhan and Bhatnīr. Shāhnawāz is shewn in Rennell's map on the Eastern bank of the Rāvi, Long. 72° E. Lat. 30.5. N. Ajūdhan is Pāk Pattan, and is about 80 miles S.-W. of Shāhnawāz. Here is the tomb of Shaikh Farīdu-d-Dīn Ganjī Shakkār which was visited by Tīmūr. From Ajūdhan to Bhatnīr is about 90 miles. Firishṭa says from Khālīškōl to Bhatnīr is fifty Kroh. See Elliott III. 415 et seqq. for the description of this campaign translated from the Malfūzāt-i-Tīmūrī. Tīmūr calls Khālīškōl, Khālī Kotālī, and says it is ten kos from Ajūdhan and fifty from Bhatnīr.

² MS. (A) گذرانید.

270. Then in the month of Jamādu-l-Awwal 801 H. the great Timūr crossed the Jamna and encamped at Firūzābād⁵ and the next day encamped above the Hauz-i-Khāṣṣ. Iqbāl Khān having got ready a force of men and elephants, came out against him and engaged his troops, but was defeated in the first engagement, and in spite of all their efforts they were not able to withdraw even a portion of the elephants into the city,⁶ so complete was the rout. And in this defeat⁷ many were killed, and when the glittering soldiers of the army of the night had routed the troops of the day, Iqbāl Khān and Sultān Maḥmūd leaving their families and friends

He shall if he be not killed, return to his home with plunder and rewards. And if he die, his reward is Paradise (Mishkāt, XVII, 1).

The جهاد jihād or holy war is a duty enjoined in several passages in the Qur'ān and the Traditions, and its rewards are those of Paradise. (See Hughes Dict. of Islām, Art. Jihād).

⁵ Firishṭa states that he dug a deep trench and fastened a number of cows and buffaloes together with raw hide, stationing sharpshooters behind them, and when Iqbāl Khān came out against him with his troops and 120 elephants defeated him with great slaughter and advanced to the Hauz-i-Khāṣṣ; and see Elliott, III, 438, et seqq.

In the meantime however, the people of the city killed some of the soldiers, accordingly on the fourth day he ordered all the inhabitants to be made prisoners,² and took them all off towards Transoxiāna; eventually Shaikh Aḥmad Kathū³ whose tomb is well known at Sar Khez⁴ in Gujārāt near to Aḥmadābād, went along with the army and had an interview with the Great Timūr, and made apparent to him his condition as a Darvesh, and his surpassing knowledge, moreover he argued with and confuted over and over again⁵ the learned doctors who were with the Shaikh Aḥmad Khaṭṭu was born at Dihlī A.H. 737 (A.D. 1336) of a noble family of that city. His name was Naṣīru-d-Dīn. He was a disciple of Bābā Ishāq Maghribī, and came to Gujārāt in the reign of Sultān Aḥmad Gujārātī (A.D. 1411-13). He was buried in Sarkhej near Aḥmadābād, (Āin-i-Akbarī [Jarrett], III. 371).

Shaikh Aḥmad Khaṭṭu surnamed Ganjbakhsh was surnamed from Khaṭṭu a village near Nāgor, the residence of his spiritual guide Bābā Ishāq Maghribī. After his return from a pilgrimage to the holy places he came back to Gujārāt and settled first at Sarkhej and afterwards at Aḥmadābād, in the building of which he was associated with Sultān Aḥmad, A.H. 813-20.

He died at Sarkhej in 849 A.H., aged 111 years, and his mansoleum with the buildings attached are said to have been begun by Muḥammad Shāh I, the son of Aḥmad Shāh, and to have been completed by his son and successor Qutbu-d-Dīn Shāh. See Bayley, History of Gujārāt, pp. 90-91, notes.

271. This signal service of the Shaikh remained ever as a debt upon the people of Hindustān; and a full detail of this circumstance is given at length in the Maqāmāt of the Shaikh. A few days after this victory Khizr Khān and Bahādur Nāhir Mīwātī,² who had taken alarm and fled to the hill country of Mīwāt, came in and paid their respects to the Great Tīmūr;³ orders were issued to make all of their party prisoners, with the exception of Khizr Khān, who had apparently done some former good service which saved him. After this he raised the banner of return and seized the country at the foot of the Siwālik hills,⁴ and greatly shook that hill country as it were with an earthquake, ere he reached Lāhor.

For the date of this victory they assigned the two words رخا (Rakhā, affluence, prosperity) and خار (Khār,⁵ a thorn); and Shaikhā Khūkhar⁶ also, who had formerly served the Amīr and had taken Lāhor by fraud from Sārang Khān, fell into his hands. He accordingly imprisoned him together with his wife and family, and gave orders to sack Lāhor and take the inhabitants prisoners. Then having made over Dipālpūr and Multān to Khizr Khān he said to him ¹ 'I have taken Dihlī and have made a present of it to you.' Leaving Lāhor he proceeded by uninterrupted marches by way of Kābul to his capital Samarqand while Khizr Khān went to his own territory (jāgīr).

⁴ According to the account in the Malfūzāt-i-Tīmūrī this was in responso to an embassy sent to Bahādur Nāhir by Tīmūr at Kūtila.

⁵ Both of these words give the date. رخا = 200 + 600 + 1 = 801

At this time such a famine and pestilence fell upon Dihlī that the city was utterly ruined, and those of the inhabitants who were left died, while for two whole months not a bird moved a wing in Dihlī. In this interval Sultān Nuṣrat Shāh, who after his defeat by Iqbāl Khān had gone into the Doāb, seeing that he had an open field, went first to Mirath and thence to Firūzābād, and fortified the city of Dihlī. 'Ādil Khān and the other folk who had escaped from the hands of the Mughuls, coming out of the various holes and corners where they had been hiding, gathered round him; when he had got together this company he nominated Shihāb Khān to proceed to Baran against Iqbāl Khān. Whilst he was on the way, a body of Hindūs attacked Shihāb Khān suddenly by night, and raised him to the dignity of martyrdom. Iqbāl Khān with great energy and promptitude obtained possession of his elephants and army, so that from day to day his power increased, while the affairs of Nuṣrat Shāh, became more and more entangled. Iqbāl Khān leaving Baran, started in the direction of Dihlī, and Nuṣrat Shāh leaving Firūzābād made for Miwāt where he died, and the four quarters of Hindustān came under the dominion of Malik of the various tribes.²

Then in the year 802 H. (1399 A.D.) Iqbāl Khān marched against Shams Khān Auḥādī³ the ruler of Baiāna, and the hostile forces met in the vicinity of Nūh and Paṭal; fortune favoured Iqbāl Khān and Shams Khān proceeded to Baiāna. Iqbāl Khān led his army towards Kaithar and exacted contributions of money and services from Rāi Harsingh.⁴ And in this same year Khwāja-i-Jahān was received into the mercy of God in Jaunpūr.

And in Jamaidu-l-Awwal² in the year 803 H. (1400 A.D.) Shams Khān of Baiāna and Mubārak Khān son of Bahādur Nāhir had an interview with Iqbāl Khān, who taking them with him fought a battle near Baitālī on the banks of the Blackwater, which is known as the Kālāpānī, with Rāi Sīr³ the ruler of that district, and overcame him, and pursued the infidels as far as the confines of Itāwa; and on his arrival at Qanauj, Sultānu-sh-Sharq Mubārak Shāh came up from Jaunpūr and sat down over against him on the other bank of the river Ganges, but inasmuch as neither of them could effect a crossing, they each returned⁴ to their own country without doing anything. As he returned, Iqbāl Khān treacherously put to death Shams Khān and Mubārak Khān.⁵ In this same year Turkbacha Sultānī, the son-in-law of Ghālib Khān of Sāmāna, collected a large army, and on the ninth of Rajab of this year fought a battle with Khizr Khān near Ajūdhan, and being defeated went to the town of Bhūhar, where Ghālib Khān in concert with the other Amirs put him to death.

Whence he arrived at the township of Baitālī on the banks of the Ganges Rāi Sanīr ... came out to oppose him.

Briggs says:—"When he reached the village of Puttyaly on the Ganges the Ray of Serinagar ... opposed him"

The Kālāpānī is the Kālī Naddī or Kālīnī (see Hunter Imp. Gazett. VII. 327) lying between the Jumna and Ganges. Timūr calls it the Karāsū (Black water), Elliott, III. 452.

⁴ The text here is wrong; for باز گشتند read باز کشید MS. (A).

⁵ MS (A) only says Shams Khān, but Firishta's account includes Mubārak Khān so that the text is probably correct.

And in the year 804 H. (1401 A.D.) Sultān Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad Shāh arrived at Dihlī from Dhār, and although Iqbāl Khān went out to receive him, and caused him to alight at the Jahān Numā¹ palace with all expressions of service and manifestations of respect, still, since Iqbāl Khān was in possession of all the paraphernalia of royalty, Sultān Maḥmūd became very jealous of him and took him with him towards Qanauj. And in this year Maliku-sh-Sharq Mubārak Shāh died, and his younger brother Sultān Ibrāhīm succeeded him, and came out to fight with Sultān Maḥmūd and Iqbāl Khān. Sultān Maḥmūd before engaging in conflict left the army of Iqbāl Khān under pretence of a hunting expedition, and had an interview with Sultān Ibrāhīm who treated him with scant ceremony; Sultān Maḥmūd accordingly removed Shāhzāda Fath Khān of Herāt, who was holding Qanauj on behalf of Mubārak Shāh, and took that fortress under his own control. The populace of Qanauj, both people and soldiery, joined Sultān Maḥmūd, and Sultān Ibrāhīm returned to Jaunpūr, while Iqbāl Khān retraced his steps towards Dihlī, so that Sultān Maḥmūd was left in undisputed and contented possession of Qanauj.

And in the year 805 H. (1402 A.D.) Iqbāl Khān made an attack upon the country round the fortress of Gwāliār, which Rāi Harsingh² had taken by treachery from the Muslims during the invasion of Timūr, and wresting it from the possession of Bairām Dev the son of Harsingh,³ took it into his own control. 274.

And in the year 806 H. (1403 A.D.) Tātār Khān the son of Zafar Khān, forgetting his filial duty took his father prisoner by treachery and sent him to Asāwal, assuming to himself the title of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn Muḥammad Shāh, and set out at the head of a large army with the intention of attempting to reduce Dihlī. While he was on the way his uncle Shams Khān administered poison to him and removed him, then he released Zafar Khān and the whole army joined him.

¹ MS. (A) reads جهان پناہ Jahānpanāh. This was the name given to the central portion of the triple citadel of Dihlī connecting old Dihlī with Sirī. It was situated in the midst of the inhabited city, and had thirteen gates; of the other two, Sirī had seven gates, and old Dihlī ten gates. See Elliott, III. 448. The palace was called Jahān Numā as in the text.

² Firishta calls him نور سنگه Narasingh.

³ Both MSS. and text read هرسنگه Harsingh.

And in the year 807 H. (1404 A.D.) Iqbāl Khān marched towards Gwāliār and Itāwa, the Rāis of which districts all took refuge within the fortress of Itāwa, and stood siege for four months; at last they made overtures for peace, sending four elephants and other presents of suitable nature. Iqbāl Khān leaving there came to Qanauj, and fought with Sultān Maḥmūd, but was unable to effect his purpose owing to the strength of the fortifications, so returned to Dihlī without accomplishing his object.

And in the Muḥarram of the year 808 H. (1405 A.D.) he marched for Sāmāna, and from thence came to Rūpar,¹ and by stratagem laid hands upon Bahrām Khān Turkbacha, who had been an antagonist of Sārang Khān, and flayed his head. Leaving Rūpar he proceeded towards Multān, intending to fight with Khizr Khān, and at Talaundi taking with him Rāi Kānālu-d-Dīn Mubīn and the other Zamīndārs, on the nineteenth of the month of Jumādīu-l-Awwal in the abovementioned year, he engaged in battle with Khizr Khān in the neighbourhood of

The saint was called Ganj Shakkar as he was reputed to have the miraculous power of turning into sugar whatever he put into his mouth, even earth and stones. Pilgrims from all parts of India, Afghānistān, and Central Asia flock to this shrine, and during the Muḥarram festival as many as 60,000 persons have been present. During the afternoon and night of the last day the crowds vie with one another in attempting to gain access to a narrow opening in a wall near the shrine known as the "Gate of Paradise." Whoever can force his way through this opening during the prescribed hours is assured of an entrance into Paradise. For this reason the crush is excessive and many are injured.

ill-fortune attended Iqbāl Khān,¹ he was defeated in the very first engagement, and his horse being wounded could not bear him off the field, so that the soldiers of Khizr Khān pursued him, and cutting off his head sent it to Fathpur, one of the dependencies of Multān. And in the month of Jumaidu-l-Ākhir of this year Sultān Maḥmūd came from Qanauj at the invitation of the Amīrs of Dihlī, and once more sat upon the throne of Dihlī, and conferred appointments upon the Amīrs, and sent the family of Mubārak Khān to Kol. And in the month of Jumaidu-l-Awwal of the year 809 H. (1406 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd marched with a force towards Qanauj, and Sultān Ibrāhīm came out thence and crossed the Ganges, but they both turned back without fighting.²

Sultān Ibrāhīm went towards Jaunpūr, and Sultān Maḥmūd towards Dihlī, but seeing that the Amīrs of Sultān Maḥmūd's army one after the other left for their own districts as they came to them in the march, Sultān Ibrāhīm turned back and besieged Qanauj; Malik Maḥmūd Tarmati, who was holding Qanauj for Sultān Maḥmūd, kept Sultān Ibrāhīm engaged in fighting for four months, but when he saw that no reinforcements were arriving from any quarter he was forced to sue for peace, and surrendered Qanauj to Sultān Ibrāhīm.³ Sultān Ibrāhīm passed the rainy season at Qanauj, and then having made over that district to Ikhtiyār Khān the grandson of Malik Daulat Yār of Kanpila, started to reduce Dihlī.

tributary stream which left the main river to the eastward of Ajūdhan, and flowing south-west joined it again some 35 miles lower down. This explains Badāonī's statement. The town of Ajūdhan is generally said to have stood upon the bank of the Satlaj itself. Cunningham (A. G. of India 214) says "The ancient town of Ajūdhan is situated on the high bank of the old Satlej 28 miles to the south-west of Depalpur and 10 miles from the present course of the river" (1871 A.D.) But from Badāonī's statement it is clear that Ajūdhan stood, not on the banks of the Satlaj itself, but on a southern loop or tributary stream. It is the modern Pākpattan, see note 2.

And in the year 810 H. (1407 A.D.) Nuṣrat Khān Karkandāz,¹ and Tātār Khān the son of Sārang Khān, and Malik Marḥabā the slave of Iqbāl Khān, turned against Sultān Maḥmūd and joined Sultān Ibrāhīm, and Asad Khān Lodi fortified himself in Sambhal. The following day Sultān Ibrāhīm reduced the fortress of Sambhal and gave it to Tātār Khān: then crossing the Ganges he encamped on the banks of the Jamnā near the fort of Kicha in the vicinity of Dihlī, where he learned that Zafar Khān had taken the district of Dhār² and was making his way to Jaunpūr;³ accordingly leaving Malik Marḥabā in Baran, he reached Jaunpūr by continuous marches; Sultān Maḥmūd pursued him and having killed Malik Marḥabā in battle, and taking Sambhal⁴ without a fight, left there Bāsad Khān after his usual custom. Tātār Khān marched to Qanauj and the Sultān came to Dihlī. And in this year Khizr Khān came with a large force and drove Daulat Khān out of Sāmāna.⁵ The Amirs of that district all sought an interview with him, and the whole country as far as to the outskirts of Dihlī fell into his hands; only Rohtak and the Doāb remained in the possession of Sultān Maḥmūd.

دهلی را محاصره کرد

² For some inscrutable reason Briggs passes over the events of two years here. cf. Firishta, Bo. text, p. 292, and Briggs, pp. 503-504.

³ The text says 712 H. MS. (A) gives 812 H.

The editor of the text gives a footnote to say that all three MSS. give 712 H.

⁴ MS. (A) inserts به before بیرام خان and omits را after سامانه.

Firishta says that Ikhtiyār Khān joined Khizr Khān seeing he was the stronger.

⁵ Held according to Firishta by Malik Idrīs on behalf of Maḥmūd Shāh.

⁶ By way of Sāmāna (Firishta).

⁷ Which was held by Iqlīm Khān and Bahādur Khān (Firishta).

⁸ Miwāt. For an account of this Province see Hunter Imp. Gaz. Vol. IX. pp. 418 and seqq. from which the substance of this note is taken :

The Meos, a tribe which gave their name to this province were of obscure origin claiming to be Rājputs, but probably a combination from various stocks and sources and nearly allied to the Mīnas. The original Meos probably became converts to Islam at the time of Maḥmūd of Ghaznī; their customs are a mixture of Hindū and Musulmān observances.

The province of Miwāt lay south of Dihlī and in Mughul times formed part of the Shūbah of Agra. Its most famous towns were Narnaul, Ulwur, Maḥmūd in the fortress of Sirī, which is part of Dihlī,¹ and Ikhtiyār Khān in Fīrozābād, and fighting several fierce battles, was prevented from maintaining the siege² by reason of the dearness of grain, and returned to Faṭhpūr by way of Pānīpath.³

And in the year 815 H. (1412 A.D.)⁴ Sultān Maḥmūd departed from this world, and the kingdom passed from the family of Firūz Shāh. The duration of his reign, full as it was of turmoil and vicissitudes, was twenty years⁵ and two months, during which Sultān Maḥmūd had had only the name of sovereignty.

Verse.

Who is there in this long-enduring world
Who can say "Mine is the kingdom" save the Almighty?

Verse.

They later on entangle its neck in a noose.

Tijāra and Rewārī. Bahādur Nāhir (who is frequently mentioned in the text) was the founder of the Khanzāda race, long the rulers of Mīwāt.

The province of Mīwāt included part of the British districts of Muttra, Gurgāon, a considerable portion of Ulwar, and some of Bhartpūr.

See Tieffenthaler. Vol. III. Map. where the province is marked.

¹ In the Malfūzat-i-Timūrī we read that Timūr plundered "all the three cities of Dihlī, by name Sirī, Jahānpanāh and old Dihlī."

See Elliott, III. p. 447, also Thomas Pathān Kings, p. 313, note 3.

² MS. (A) omits قرار.

³ Pānīpath. A town of great antiquity. Lat. 29° 23' N. Long. 77° 1' 10" E. 53 miles N. of Dihlī. It was the scene of decisive battles on three occasions in historical times. The famous surgeons, father and son, Shaikh Hasan and Shaikh Bīnā were natives of Pānīpat, see Aīn-i-Akbarī (B) I. 543, note to No. 94.

See Hunter Imp. Gaz. XI. 44.

⁴ In the month of Zū Qa'da (Firishta). Firishta does not state the year though taken in connection with what has gone before he appears to mean 814 H. but see n 2: Badāonī however agrees, with the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī. On this point see Thomas, Pathān Kings, p. 317, note.

⁵ MS. (A) reads here,

و مدت ملک بان همه تزلزل و انقلاب نوزده سال و دو ماه بود

Firishta has almost the same words but says بیست سال twenty years as in the text. So also the Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī.

Firishta's statement is not very clear as to the year in which Maḥmūd died, but as he goes on to say that after his death the Amīrs gave in their

Save the blood of kings there is nought in this bowl,
 Save ¹ the dust of lovers there is nought in this desert.

Of the poets of the reign of Sultān Maḥmūd is Qāzī Zāhīr Dihlavī ² who has left a Dīwān (anthology) full of qaṣīdahs in eulogy (of Maḥmūd) of which this is one.

Heir to the mighty monarchy, Sultān Maḥmūd,
 Who succeeded his father and grandfather in the sovereignty 278.
 of the world;

He removed Dabarān ³ from the sky to serve as his signet, While Taurus complained saying I have but this one eye left.⁴

By the first strain of his bow string he has wakened the Lion,
 And after that he has stretched him out in sleep with the deep-piercing arrow.

The whole world boasts of full satiation at the board of thy favour,

Save only the lute which complains that its belly is empty.⁵
 Oh thou whose world-conquering sword flashes in the darkness of infidelity like to the lightning flashing through the darkness of night,

Although the heaven has made thine enemies intoxicated like the eyes of the beloved idols for some time, still at last it has overthrown them.

allegiance to Daulat Khān Lodī, who struck the coinage, &c., in Maḥarram of 816 H. it is tolerably clear that he means Zu-l-Qa'da 815 H. as the date of Maḥmūd's death, and not 814 H. as Briggs would have it.

² Qāzī Zāhīr Dihlavī. I can find no mention of this poet.

³ الدبران The Hyades one of the two clusters of stars included within the constellation Taurus the other being the Pleiades.

Ancient astronomers were not agreed as to the number of stars included in the Hyades. Thales reckoned two only (α and ε) the two eyes of the Bull. (Smith, Dict. Greek and Rom. Antiq. 150 a).

⁴ The constellation Taurus is here spoken of as having lost one of his two eyes by which must be meant the two clusters of stars above mentioned, and not α and ε of Taurus as reckoned by Thales.

⁵ The رباب rubāb or lute, is a stringed instrument like a guitar but having the body shaped like a hollowed gourd somewhat resembling the body of the mandolin.

It is envy of thy generous hand which throws the ocean into tumult, for if it be not so, the ocean is never so disturbed by the winds of heaven.

The following is also by the same author :

Thou art a monarch before whom the heavens bow in adoration,
Thou art a King in whose reign time itself exults.

*Qiblah*¹ of the nation, and mainstay of kingdoms and religion, Mahmūd

Whom the assemblies of Sultān have chosen as their Imām.²

The Qāzī of the heavens³ comes out on foot to receive him

When the Governor of his unerring judgment sends the summons.

He keeps constant watch⁴ lest sedition should make a night assault,

Thy vigilance stands with a drawn sword in its hand while the people sleep (in safety).

In order that thy enemy may not enjoy the sweet breezes of the garden of thy favour

The heavens have afflicted him with fever and headache in addition to catarrh.⁵

قبله خلق و قیام دول و دین محمود.

A foot-note to the Calcutta text states that the reading there given is the same in all three MSS. of Badāonī and that probably the word شه has dropped out after the word دین. This is a quite unnecessary supposition. The reading above given fulfils all requirements. MS. (B) corresponds save that for دول it reads دل an evident copyist's error.

قبله Qiblah. This is the direction in which Muslims are bound to turn during prayer: This is laid down in the Qur'ān, Sura II. "We see thee often turn thy face about in the heavens, but we will surely turn thee to a qiblah thou shalt like. Turn then thy face towards the sacred Mosque, whosoever ye be turn your faces towards it" (v. 139). From the Hijra, Muḥammad at first directed his followers to turn towards the temple at Jerusalem, but in the second year of the Hijra the Ka'bah at Mekka was fixed as the qiblah. See Hughes' Dict. of Islam, s. v. Qiblah.

³ قاضی چرخ Qāzī-i-Charkh. The planet Jupiter.

⁴ MS. (A) reads incorrectly همیدار پاس.

⁵ This couplet is inevitably ridiculous to English ears: the meaning is that in order to deprive him of the pleasures of the perfumed breezes, he has been afflicted with the anosmia which results from a cold in the head.

The heavens have apportioned every arrow of thine to one of the various families,

It were not possible to allot the arrows¹ in any better way than this.

The following is also his :

My love has gone outside, do thou my life also go outside,
For if thou art not outside with my love, thou wilt be outside the pale of love.

Specially that now, in order to uproot the infidels and rebels,²
The royal standards have gone out clothed in good fortune.

Shāh Maḥmūd, he who when he sallied forth against the infidels,

Thou would'st say 'Īsa has come forth to slay Dajjāl.³

Thy reign has cast sedition into the bondage of annihilation.

I said to the heavens, Beware! this is a prisoner⁴ of the Sultān, free him not!

¹ سهام Sihām, called also قِدَاح qidāḥ. These are the arrows used by the ancient Arabs for gambling in the manner called الميسر Al-maisar (forbidden in the Qur'ān, II. 216, v. 92, 93). In this game a camel was bought and slaughtered, and divided into twenty-eight portions which were drawn for with ten arrows called اِزْلَام azlām. The numbers after the names of the arrows indicate the value of the share drawn, فَذ faẓḍ (1), تَوَام tau'am (2), رَقِيب raqīb (3), نَافِيس nāfis (4), حِلْس ḥils (5), مُسْبِل musbal (6), مَعْلَى muallā (7).

The remaining three arrows were blanks and gained no share. Their names were سَفِيح safīḥ, مَنِح manīḥ, وَغْد waghd. The name of each arrow was written upon it and they were all put into a bag called رِبَابَة ribābah, and given into the charge of a trustworthy man known as المَجِيل al-mujīl or المَفِيض al-mufīḥ whose duty was to shake the arrows up and draw out one for each in turn. Whoever drew a blank had to pay the cost of the camel, while those who drew a winning arrow received a proportionate share according to the value of the arrow. See Majma'u-l-Baḥrain, Maqāmah, XIII. p. 99.

This is also his :

The month of Dai¹ has arrived, and the air has in consequence become so cold²

That nothing save the icy breeze can move from its place.

The earth is cold and frost bound,³ the air is even colder than the earth,

In very truth the air is chill with the weariness of age.

In the garden the fire of the tulip and Gulnār have died down,

280. From the cold the (graceful) trees of the garden have become mere sticks.

The water is hard frozen from the cold, and says with petulance,

I will break if anyone places his foot upon my head.

No single bud comes out from its resting place in the heart of the tree, although it wears upon its cypress-like body a cap and mantle.

The bird has ceased its song when it saw the havoc wrought by autumn,

When a general pillage is going on, lamentation is futile.

Seek not for leaves and seed-bearing fruit in the garden, for to-day

The leaves have been scattered by the wind, the seeds remain hidden beneath the earth.

The morning breeze draws every breath like a deep drawn sigh, Seeing that it has cast to the winds so beauteous a being as the rose.

So far has the rose gone that should you search the East and the West,

You will not find it save in the assembly of the King of the World.

Shāh Maḥmūd from the splendour of whose assemblies, there is eternal spring in the month of Dai, and the world is like Paradise.

ing thee.

I have no other occupation save singing thy praises.

³ This refers to the legend told by Muḥammadan commentators on certain verses of the Qur'ān, that when Khizr had disappeared in search of the water of immortality, Moses was inspired to search for him and was told that he would meet him by a rock where two seas met, and where he should lose a fish which he was directed to take with him. The companion spoken of is said to have been Joshua, and the servant who guided them (v. 64) was no less than Khizr himself, and when Moses asked if he should follow him said, "Verily thou canst never have patience with me. How canst thou be patient in what thou comprehendest no knowledge of." Khizr upon being assured by Moses that he would be patient bade him to follow but not to ask about anything he might see. They embarked in a ship which Khizr scuttled, whereupon Moses naturally asked the reason and was rebuked. Further on they met a boy whom Khizr killed and again roused Moses' impatience; again they found a wall which Khizr prevented from falling without exacting any reward for his services, and again Moses became impatient whereupon Khizr said, "This is the parting between me and thee" and explained to Moses the reason for his action in each case. The poet here likens the three divisions of the style to three alifs (ا) and the stamens to six mīms (م) the anthers forming the head of the letter, and the curved filament its downward stroke. Thus the single alif (ا) and two mīms (م) form he says the word أمم umam: the plural of أمة ummatun meaning the followers of a prophet, or a people of one religion, hence generically a generation of men as in the saying قد مضت أمم generations of men have passed away.

And in truth after Qāzī Zāhir no poet arose in Hindūstān whose poetry repaid the trouble of reading. After the death of Sultān Maḥmūd the great Amīrs of Hindūstān as for instance Mubārīz Khān and Malik Idrīs who was the ruler of Rohtak, quarrelled with Khizr Khān and were disposed to make common cause with Daulat Khān, Khizr Khān accordingly stood fast in Fathpūr and made no expeditions to any country.

In Muḥarram of the year 816 H. (1414 A.D.) Daulat Khān having gone towards Kaithar on a hunting expedition and having brought the Rāis of that district into his toils, went to Baitālī, and Mahābat Khān the Wālī of Badāon came thither and joined him. And in this year Sultān Ibrāhīm besieged Qādir Khān the son of Maḥmūd Khān in Kālpī, and Daulat Khān being very short handed, ignored him, and omitted to send reinforcements to either of these places; and Khizr Khān in Zū-l-qāda of this year came to the fortress of Firūzābād,¹ the Amīrs of which district came into him, and Malik Idrīs was besieged in Rohtak. Khizr Khān marched by that route to Miwāt and taking with him Jalāl Khān Miwātī the brother's son of Bahādur Nāhir, conveyed him to Sanbal which place he pillaged, and in Zū Hijjah of that same year he encamped before the gates of Dihlī with the intention of taking it; Daulat Khān held out for four months, but at last was compelled by the want of agreement with Malik Lonā and the other supporters of Khizr Khān to sue for peace, humbly and earnestly. He had an interview with Khizr Khān who threw him into prison, and delivered him to Qiwām Khān who conveyed him to the fortress of Firūza and slew him. This happened in the year 816 H. (1414 A.D.) on the seventeenth of Rabī'u-l-Awwal.² raised the standards of monarchy, became firmly established upon the throne of sovereignty.

285. This Malik Suleimān had been exalted in his childhood by Malik Naṣīr-u-l-Mulk Marwān Fīrūz Shāhī to the rank of a son, and had been educated accordingly. In real truth he was a Saiyyidzāda of high family, so that on one occasion Makhdūm-i-Jahāniyān Saiyyidu-s-Sādāt, the fountain of dignities, Shaikh Jalālu-l-Haqq wau-s-Shara'wau-d-dīn al-Bukhārī may God sanctify his soul, came for some important purpose into the house of Malik Marwān Daulat; food was served, and Malik Suleimān brought the ewer and bason to Makhdūm intending to pour water over his august hands. Makhdūm addressing him by the title of Malik Marwān Daulat, said, This lad is a Saiyyid Zāda, and it is derogatory to him to allot him such a menial service. From that day forth, it was known that Malik Suleimān was an undoubted Saiyyid; but besides this, the signs of Saiyyidship, and good qualities and praiseworthy traits became manifestly visible in the character of Masnad-i-'Ālī Saiyyid Khizr Khān.

Verse.

The Saiyyid was a man in whom were manifested
The virtues of Muḥammad, and the grace of 'Alī the accepted.

The following is an epitome of the career of Malik Marwān Daulat. He was governor of Multān in the time of Fīrūz Shāh, and after the death of Malik Marwān Daulat, the Government of that district devolved upon his son Malik Shaikh, shortly after whose death it was confirmed to Malik Suleimān. He also bade farewell to this world in that reign, and the country of Multān with its dependencies was conferred upon Saiyyid Khizr Khān on behalf of Sultān Fīrūz Shāh, up to the date when the aforesaid Saiyyid was advanced to the Sultānate by the Amirs. He however would not assume the title of King; but received the title of Rāyāt-i-A'ala.¹

On the date mentioned he alighted at the palace of Sultān Maḥmūd, and gained over the hearts of great and small by public largesse and unbounded favours, distributing titles, offices, and territories among his personal attendants; in the very first year of his accession he conferred upon Malik Naḥv² (Tuḥfa) the title of Tāju-l-Mulk, and appointed him with a considerable following to the command of the eastern districts of Hindūstān; he accordingly crossed the river Ganges at the ford of Pīrāhā,¹ and entered the country of Kaithar. Rāi Har Singh and the rebels of that district sought refuge in the forests of that country² and lay hid there. Then he gave over Kaithar to rapine and plunder, whereupon Mahābat Khān Hākim of Badāon also came in and had an interview with him, and Rāi Har Singh being reduced to extremities submitted to him, agreeing to the conditions imposed of the payment of tribute and of a yearly offering. Tāju-l-Mulk and Mahābat Khān seized the banks of the river Rahab, and on arriving at the ford of Sargdawārī crossed the Ganges, chastised the infidels of Kahwar (which is now known by the name of Shamsābād)³ Kanpila and Baitālī, and passing by the towns of Sakina⁴ and Pādham came to Rāparī;⁵ and Hasan Khān and Malik Hamra his brother, who held the government of Rāparī, and Rāi Sar the governor of Chandawār, together with the infidels of Gwālīār all came and joined hands with him, agreeing to pay tribute, and voluntarily assuming the yoke of obedience. From thence Malik Tāju-l-Mulk came to the township of Jālesar,⁶ which he wrested from the grasp of the infidels of Chandawār, and restored as of old to the control of the Muslims who had held it in days of yore, and gave fresh currency to the Muḥam-madan religion. Then having appointed his own agents and having seized the right bank of the Black water, ¹ inflicted condign punishment upon the infidels of Etāwah, and then returned towards the city.

And in the year 818 H. (1415 A.D.) he gave to Saiyyid Khizr Khān the younger son ² of Malik Mubārak, whose countenance betokened royal dignity, the territory of Firūzpūr and Sihhind, together with the whole of the districts which were in the possession of Bairam Khān Turkbacha, and subjected the supreme control and administration of that tract of country to his will and pleasure, while Malik Sadhū Nādir, ³ having assumed the control of the western portion of Hindūstān, was appointed to this office with the rank of Nāib-i-Shāhzāda (i.e., vicerent of the Prince).

And in the aforesaid year the Prince here alluded to having, in concert with Malik ⁴ Sadhū Nādira and Zīrak Khān the Amīr of Sāmāna and other Amīrs and Maliks, ⁵ set in order the important affairs of that province, and put everything upon a satisfactory footing, returned to Dihlī his capital city.

And in the year 819 H. (1416 A.D.) he appointed Malik Tāju-l-Mulk ⁶ with a large army to carry the standards of Khizr Khān ⁷ towards Baiāna and Gwālīār; Malik Karīmu-l-Mulk, the brother of Shams Khān Auḥadī came and had an interview with him.

287. Having cleared those regions of the thorns of infidelity he returned; and in this selfsame year some of the Turkbachas of Bairam Khān's party seized by treachery Malik Sadhū Nādira, who was holding the district of Sihhind as the Shahzāda's deputy, raised him to the dignity of martyrdom, and took possession of Sihhind. Khizr Khān thereupon sent Zīrak Khān to put down this rebellion, and he accordingly went thence to the foot of the hills in pursuit of those rebels, but after encountering many difficulties he returned.

¹ The Kālī Nadī or Kālindī, or Kālinī, rises in the Muzaffarnagar district, and drains the whole eastern portion of the Doāb. The name in the text آب سیاه ab-i-siyāh means Black water, and is a translation of the Hindūstānī kālī naddī.

In this year also Sultān Aḥmad, who was the ruler of Gujerāt, laid seige to Nāgor,¹ but upon hearing of the march of Khizr Khān abandoned the siege and withdrew. Khizr Khān came to Chhāin,² and Alyās Khān the governor of Chhāin gave in his allegiance to him. Thence he proceeded to Gwāliār, and although he did not reduce that fortress, still he levied tribute and offerings from it, and thence came to Baiāna where Shams Khān Auḥadī gave in his submission. And in the year 820 H. (1417 A.D.) Tūghlān the Ra'is with his band who had been the murderers of Malik Sadhū revolted. Zīrak Khān was again appointed (to chastise them), and scattered that gathering in all directions.

And in the year 821 H. (1418 A.D.) Khizr Khān went up against Kaithar, and Har Singh Dev, who has already been mentioned, laid waste the whole of Kaithar, and took to the forest of Ānwla, the circumference of which is twenty-four krohs. After several engagements he was defeated, and eventually withdrew to the hill country of Kumāon. Tāju-l-Mulk crossed the river Rahab and pursued him as far as the hills, and from there came to Badāon, and taking with him Mahābat Khān, the governor of Badāon, crossed the Ganges by the crossing of Bajlāna: then having dismissed Mahābat Khān, he himself went on to Itāwa, whence he returned to Dihlī laden with spoil. In this same year, also, Khizr Khān³ again led an army against Kaithar, and proceeding by way of Kol arrived at Baitālī, where he crossed the Ganges and came to Badāon. On this occasion Mahābat

In Brigg's (I. 509) we find this place called Jalwur, with a footnote: "I have some doubt as to the true name: it is differently written in my various MSS." In the lithographed edition of Firishta the name is written plainly enough جانور Jānūr (Bombay Edn. I, 294), and it is said that without waiting for Khizr Khān to advance, Aḥmad withdrew in the direction of Mālwa, and that when Khizr Khān arrived at Jānūr, Alyās Khān who was governor of the new city called 'Arūs-i-Jahān, which was one of the cities built by 'Alān-d-Dīn Khiljī, came to pay his homage. Evidently, then, the city mentioned in our text and this "'Arūs-i-Jahān" are the same.

Khān Badāoni being afraid of him, shut himself up in the fortress, and opposed Khizr Khān for a space of six months; he was on the point of being defeated, when Qiwām Khān and Ikhtiyār Khān, and certain of the other Mahmūd Shāhi Amīrs who had seceded from Daulat Khān and had espoused the cause of Khizr Khān, meditated treason against Khizr Khān: but Khizr Khān becoming aware of this state of things¹ abandoned (the siege of) Badāon, and returned to Dihlī. And in the year 822 H. (1419 A.D.) he put those traitor Amīrs to death on the banks of the Ganges, in vengeance for the treachery of which they had been guilty. In the same year also an obscure person on the confines of Bajwāra,² falsely gave himself out to be Sārang Khān who had been killed some time before, and upon his assuming this name several adventurers flocked to him. Khizr Khān deputed Sultān Shāh Lodī³ to proceed against him. They fought a fierce battle in the neighbourhood of Sihriind, and Sārang Khān the impostor fled and took to the mountains. Sultān Shāh made Rūpar his head quarters.⁴ In this same year Khizr Khān sent Tāju-l-Mulk to Itāwa. Rāi Sipar was holding out in that fort, but sought for quarter, and consented to pay revenue to Tāju-l-Mulk.⁵ Thence he came to Chandwār, and having laid it waste and pillaged it, proceeded by way of Kaithar to Dihlī. In this same year Malik Tāju-d-Dīn died, and the duties of his Vazīrship were entrusted to his elder son Malik Sikandar. Tūghān Rāi again raised an insurrection in Sihriind, and Malik Khairu-d-Dīn was appointed to oppose him, and returned after having satisfactorily quelled his rebellion.

² Firishta, (I. 295) says نزدیک ماچیوارہ near Māchīwāra, and in the Āin-i-Akbarī we find it stated that Māchīwārah is situated on the banks of the Sutlej (Jarrett, II. 310). In Rennell's Map (Tieff. III.) we find Māchīwārah figured between Rūpar and Lūdhīāna. It lies 23 miles south of Lūdhīāna, and is a very ancient city mentioned in the Mahābhārata. Bajwāra is further north near Hoshiarpūr. (See Hunter, Imp. Gaz., II. 439).

³ Firishta adds, "called Islām Khān who was the governor of Sarhind."

⁴ This appears to be the meaning of the text. Firishta tells us that Islām Khān pursued "Sārang Khān" with his own forces and those of certain other Maliks, but returned upon finding that he had hidden himself.

⁵ MS. (A) مل واجبى. Firishta calls him Rāi Samir.

And in the year 824 H. (1421 A.D.) Khizr Khān proceeded to 289. Miwāt and took Kotla; thence he hastened to Gwāliār, from the Rāi of which place he levied considerable sums and returned to Itāwa. Rāi Sipar had gone to hell, and ¹ his son had tendered his submission. In this interval ² a severe illness attacked Khizr Khān which led to his return towards Dihli. Having arrived at that city on the seventeenth of Jumādiu-l-Awwal in the above year, he was received into the mercy of God and passed away from the world.

Verse.

Every evening is followed by the morning.
At last there comes an end to every labour.

The duration of his reign was seven years and some months.³

SULTĀN MUBĀRAK SHĀH IBNI KHIZR KHĀN IBNI MALIK SULĪMĀN,

In accordance with his rights as heir-presumptive ascended the throne with the consent of the Amirs in the year 824 H. (1421 A.D.)⁴ and became firmly settled in the administration of his kingdom. In this year Jasrat Khūkar⁵ the son of Shaikhā Khūkar raised a rebellion, the reason of which was that he had taken unawares Sultān 'Alī the king of Kashmīr, who had started with the intention of conquering Tatta⁶ and had defeated him in one of the mountain passes,⁷ a vast amount of plunder falling into his hands. Emboldened by this victory, he used the royal treasures which he had obtained to further an attempt to seize the kingdom of Dihli, and having crossed the rivers Biāh and Sutlej with a

³ Firishta adds, "He was a just and wise king, kind and true to his word, his subjects loved him with a grateful affection so that great and small, master and servant, sat and mourned for him in black raiment till the third day, when they laid aside their mourning garments, and raised his son Mubārak Shāh to the throne."

⁴ MS. (A) reads correctly اربع for احدى MS. (B) has the same reading as the text.

⁵ MSS. (A) and (B) omit کھوکر. Firishta writes کھکر Khakar and calls him the brother of Shaikhā Khakar.

⁶ Thus the text and MS. (B). MS. (A) reads simply بقصد تته. Baqasbai Tatta, i. e., for the town of Tatta.

Jasrat came to Ludhiāna² and plundered and pillaged along the banks of the river Sutlej as far as the boundaries of Rūpar;³ there he crossed the river and came to Jālandhar.⁴ Zīrak Khān had taken refuge in the fort of Jālandhar. Jasrat descended the bank of the river Sarsuti whereupon the question of peace arose; Jasrat by some treachery made Zīrak Khān prisoner. Sultān Mubārak Shāh moved towards Sihrind, upon hearing which Jasrat Shaikhā⁵ released Zīrak Khān who went to Sāmāna and offered his services to Mubārak Shāh who proceeded to Ludhiāna. Jasrat having crossed the Ludhiāna river drew up to oppose him, being in possession of the whole of the boats. The army of Mubārak Shāh was unable to cross the river, until after the rising of Canopus⁶ when the river became fordable. The Sultān then crossed the river; Jasrat fled and having

² The text and both MSS. read کداهنه Kudāhna, but it is evident that we should read کدھیانه Ludhiāna. We find in Firishta (loc. cit.), و حبرت بلود یانه آمده. "Jasrat having come to Lūdiāna." Talaundī I cannot identify, but there is a place on the North bank of the Sutlej in Rennell's map, called Tulloom, this with the affixed genitive feminine termination (Panjābī) dī, would give Tulūmdī or Tulūndī, i. e., the village of Tulūm. Tulloom lies about 20 miles S. S.-W. of Ludhiāna (see Rennell's map, Tieff., III), on the opposite bank of the river.

³ Rūpar in Rennell's map is placed North-East of Ludhiāna about 50 miles distant: but on modern maps it is shewn almost due East of Ludhiāna and about 35 miles from it.

It is mentioned by Ptolemy by the name of Kulindrine or Sulindrine, see Cunningham, A. G. I., pp. 135, etc., and Hunter, Gaz. Ind., VII. 91.

⁵ MS. (A) omits بن probably correctly as we have seen from Firishta's account.

The troops of Mubārak Khān followed him and the greater part of his infantry and cavalry were killed, and all his wealth and treasure was plundered and lost. Rāi Bhīm³ the chief of Jammoo offered his services to Mubārak Shāh and guided his army.⁴ Mubārak Shāh returned thence to Lāhor.

And in the year 825 H. (A.D. 1421) he remained encamped on the bank of the river Rāvi for nearly a month, rebuilt the city of Lāhor which had been laid in ruins during the late invasion, and completely repaired the citadel where it had been breached and levelled;⁵ then having left there Malik Maḥmūd Hasan who bore the title of Maliku-sh-Sharq, returned to Dihli. Five months later Jasrat Khūkar again came against Lāhor with a large army and encamped at the abode of Shaikhul-Mashāikh Shaikh Hasan Zinjānī,⁶ may God sanctify him, and every day for a month made repeated efforts to take the city by assault, but eventually failing to attain his object⁷ withdrew to Kalānor⁸ and fought a battle with Rāi Bhīm, and when both sides were in the midst of the fight they agreed to make peace.

Malik Sikander Tuḥfa who had been despatched from Dihli to reinforce Malik⁹ Maḥmūd Hasan crossed the Rāvi by the ford of Pūhī¹⁰ and encamped at Lāhor, and Jasrat feeling that he was not able to cope with the conjoint forces¹¹ crossed the Chhināb

In the year 826 H. (1422 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh proceeded to Kaithar, and Mahābat Khān of Badāon who had revolted against Khizr Khān came in and submitted himself, and was distinguished by special marks of favour. Leaving there² he crossed the Ganges and attacked the country of the Panwārs³ in the neighbourhood of Khor otherwise known as Shamsābād,⁴ and having put the majority of them to the sword ravaged the country; then having left Malik Mubārīz and Zīrak Khān and Kamāl Khān with a large force in the fortress of Kanpila to quell the insurrection of the rebels he returned to Dihlī.

² Firishṭa tells us that Mahābat Khān in obedience to the orders of the Sultān crossed the Ganges and invaded the territories of the Rāthor tribe.

For a full account of the Panwārs see Sherring (Hindū Tribes and Castes), II. p. 93, see also Elliot, (Races of N.-W. P. of India).

⁵ The text reads دهلي Dihlī with a foot-note variant دھار Dhār. MS. (A) reads دھار Dhār. Firishṭa says, Sultān Hoshang Wālī of Mālwa. The town of Ujjain and Dhār have at one period or another supplied a capital for the legendary Hindū dynasties of Mālwa. (See Hunter, Imp. Gaz., IV. 245, Dhār).

subduing that region; Mubārak Shāh upon receiving intelligence of this proceeded towards Gwāliār; when he arrived in the neighbourhood of Baiāna, Shams Khān Auḥadī¹ the son of Auḥad Khān Auḥadī, Governor of Baiāna, who had put to death by treacherous means his uncle Mubārak Khān, became alarmed and revolted, and after laying waste Baiāna entrenched himself² in the fortress, but eventually submitted.

Mubārak Shāh left that place and marched towards Gwāliār, but Alp Khān proceeding along the banks of the Chambal river³ would not permit the army of Mubārak Shāh to cross: however the soldiers of Mubārak Shāh crossed by another ford, scattered the forces of Alp Khān, and returned triumphant. This engagement led to a peaceful settlement, and Alp Khān sent in many presents and returned towards Dhār, while Mubārak Shāh proceeded to Dihlī. 292.

And in the year 827 H. (1423 A.D.) he again ordered an expedition towards the hills of Kumāon and Kaithar, on returning whence he laid waste Miwāt. In this year a severe famine occurred throughout the whole of Hindūstān. In the year 829 H. he again proceeded towards Miwāt and reduced the fortresses of Indor and Alwar.

³ Firishṭa writes of this: And Sultān Hoshang seized the fords of the Chhanbal river and opposed his progress, but Mubārak Shāh discovered another ford and crossed rapidly; and certain of the Amīrs of the advance guard of the Dihlī forces pillaged the camp of the Sultān of Mālwa and took many prisoners, but inasmuch as these were Muslims Mubārak Shāh set them free.

Sultān Hoshang sued for peace sending in suitable offerings, and withdrew towards Dhār. Mubārak Shāh halted on the banks of the Chhanbal levying taxes on the old scale from the landholders of that district, and eventually arrived at Dihlī in the month of Rajab 827 H.

The Chambal or Chhanbal river is a river of Central India and one of the principal tributaries of the Jamna, it rises in Mālwa; about eight or nine miles south-west of Mhow it is joined by the Kali-Sind, Parbatī and Banas, flows past Dholpūr into Etāwah and joins the Jamna 40 miles below Etāwah town. The Charmanwālī of Sanskrit writers. (See Hunter, Imp. Gaz. III. 331).

And in the year 830 H. he took Baiāna from Muḥammad Khān Auḥadī, and sent the family of Auḥadī to the palace known as Jahān Numā,¹ and assigned it to them as a residence. He then gave Baiāna to Malik Muqbil Khān one of his retainers, and Sikrī to Malik Khairu-d-Dīn Tuḥfa, while he himself led an army against Gwālīār receiving the submission of the Rāis of that district.

And in the year 831 H. (1427 A.D.) ambassadors arrived in Dihlī from Qādir Khān, governor of Kālpī, bringing tidings that Sharqī² was besieging him. Mubārak Shāh marched to oppose Sharqī; but in the meantime tidings arrived that Sharqī had attacked Bhūngāon³ and was encamped there, intending to proceed to Badāon.⁴ Mubārak Shāh, who had crossed the river Jamna at the ford of Nūh Patal, and had attacked Jartaulī,⁵ on arrival at the township of Atraulī⁶ received intelligence that Mukhtaṣṣ Khān⁷ the brother of Sharqī had arrived on the borders of Itāwa with an army and many elephants; Mubārak Shāh detailed Maliku-sh-Sharq Maḥmūd Ḥusan with ten thousand cavalry to oppose Mukhtaṣṣ Khān. Mukhtaṣṣ Khān joined hands with Sharqī who proceeded along the banks of the Black-Water, otherwise known as the Kālinī,⁸ and arrived in the vicinity of the township of Burhānābād one of the dependencies of Itāwa. Mubārak Shāh marching from Atraulī encamped at the town of Bhongāon is in the Mainpūrī District, 9½ miles east from Mainpūrī at the junction of the Agra and Grand Trunk roads. The town was founded according to tradition, by Rājā Bhim Sen who was cured of leprosy by bathing in the jhīl or lake. (Hunter, Imp. Gaz. II. 403.)

Kota,¹ but Sharqī declined battle and withdrew towards Rāpri, and thence, after crossing the Jamna, proceeded to Baiāna and encamped on the bank of the river of Kaithar. Mubārak Shāh pursued him as far as Chandwār; a space of four krohs lay between the two armies so that the outposts of the forces could see each other. They remained thus confronting each other for twenty days; at last Sharqī came out in force, and from mid-day till nightfall hard fighting went on between the two armies, and the event was not decided on that day; on the following day Sharqī turned back towards his own country,² and Mubārak Shāh, considering that both sides were Muslims, no longer pursued him, but went towards Satgāna,³ and having conquered that country followed the bank of the Chanbal river and came down to Baiāna.

Muhammad Khān Auḥadī, who on account of having had an (unsatisfactory) interview with Sharqī had taken fright, and had entrenched himself in the fortress, came and sought protection in an interview with Mubārak Shāh.⁴ Mubārak Shāh thereupon retraced his steps to Dihli.

And in the year 832 H. Malik-sh-Sharq Maḥmūd Ḥasan, who had been left in Baiāna by Mubārak Shāh as his Viceroy, and had put the affairs of that place in order, and had also chastised⁵ those infidels who had made common cause with Muhammad Khān and had raised disturbances, came to Court and received substantial favours, and the fortress of Fīroza was confirmed to him. In that same year Malik Rajab Nadira, governor of Multān died, and Malik Maḥmūd Ḥasan received the title of 'Imādu-l-Mulk (Pillar of the State) and proceeded to Multān.

And in the year 833 H. (1429 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh went to Gwāliār by way of Baiāna, and having taken the Rāpri district from the son of Ḥasan Khān gave it to Malik Hamza, and returned 294.

to the city (Dihli). On the way thither Saiyyid Sālīm, who had served Khizr Khān for thirty years,¹ and held the fief of Tabarhinda, died. The title of Saiyyid Khān was conferred upon one of his sons, and that of Shujā'u-l-Mulk upon the other.² And Fūlād, a Turkbacha slave, one of the servants of the aforesaid Saiyyid Sālīm, raised a rebellion in Tabarhinda and took possession of the enormous wealth which had been amassed by Saiyyid Sālīm. Mubārak Shāh imprisoned the sons of Saiyyid Sālīm, and appointed Malik Yūsuf Sarūr and Rāi Hansū Bhatī³ to oppose him (Fūlād). Fūlād Turkbacha made a night attack upon them and scattered their forces, and much valuable booty fell into his hands. Mubārak Shāh led an army against Tabarhinda, and the Turkbacha slave was besieged there. Mubārak Shāh summoned 'Imādu-l-Mulk from Multān, and sent him with a message to the Turkbacha slave, who, after suing for quarter, came out from the fort and had an interview with 'Imādu-l-Mulk, but did not rely upon his assurances, and returned in alarm to the fort and continued to fight. Mubārak Shāh permitted 'Imādu-l-Mulk to proceed to Multān and himself returned to Dihli. The slave (Fūlād) continued to engage in battle at intervals with the troops of Mubārak Shāh during the six months during which he was absent. At last he sent considerable sums of money⁴ by way of presents to Shaikh 'Alī Mughul who was the ruler of Kābul. Shaikh 'Alī accordingly came to his assistance from Kābul with a vast army, which was reinforced by a large number of men from the borders of the Panjāb. He removed the slave

And in the year 834 H. (1430 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh sent a vast army to the assistance of 'Imādu-l-Mulk, and appointed Fath Khān ibn-i-Sultān Muzaffar Khān of Gujrāt to the command of that force. Shaikh 'Alī was not able to stand against them,⁶ so changed front, and retired under cover of night into an entrenchment which he had thrown up around his position; when they surrounded his entrenchment he retreated towards Jhīlam, and having crossed the river there lost the greater part of his men by drowning, some were killed and some taken prisoners.⁷ Shaikh 'Alī and Amīr Muzaffar proceeded with a certain number of men to the town of Shīwar;⁸ all their baggage and property having been taken, the army of 'Imādu-l-Mulk pursued them up to that point. Amīr Muẓaffar remained entrenched within the fortress while Shaikh 'Alī set his face to go to Kābul. The victorious army abandoned the siege and returned to Dihlī. Multān was taken away from 'Imādu-l-Mulk and given to Malik Khairu-d-Dīn Khān which led to great disturbances on the borders of Multān.

296. And in the year 835 H. (1431 A.D.) Malik Sikander,¹ governor of Lāhor, set out to quell the rebellion which Jasrat Khūkhar had stirred up at the foot of the hills. Jasrat took him² unawares and engaged him in battle; Sikander falling into the hands of Jasrat Khūkhar was taken prisoner near Jālandhar. Jasrat took his prisoner to Lāhor and besieged the city, and Saiyyid Najmu-d-Dīn the regent of Sikander, and Malik Khushkhabr³ the slave of Sikander, fought several battles with him. In the meantime Shaikh 'Alī collected an army and again came on to the borders of Multān,⁴ and assaulted Khūtpūr,⁵ taking prisoners the greater portion of the inhabitants of Jhīlam and its vicinity, and seized Tūlumba, pillaging and despoiling all the inhabitants and making them prisoners; most of them he put to death, and took the rest of them, great and small, to his own country.

In the meantime Fūlād Turkbacha, who has been mentioned above, left Tabarhinda and invaded the territory of Rāi Fīroz⁶ who engaged him in battle and was slain, Fūlād sending his head to Tabarhinda.

In this year also the Sultān again led an army towards Lāhor and Multān; when he arrived in the vicinity of Sāmāna, Jasrat withdrew from in front of Lāhor towards the foot of the hills, and Shaikh 'Alī also retired to his own country. Lāhor and Jālandhar were taken from Shamsu-l-Mulk and given to Nuṣrat Khān Gurgandāz, and Mubārak Shāh gave orders for the family and relations of Shamsu-l-Mulk to be removed⁷ from Lāhor to Dihlī, whither he himself returned.

And in the year 836 H. (1433 A.D.) Mubārak Shāh once more hastened to Sāmāna¹ to put down the rebellion of Jasrat; when he arrived at Pānīpath he received intelligence of the death of his mother, who was called Makhdūma-i-Jahān (Mistress of the world), and turned back with a small retinue² to Dihlī, and having remained there ten days to perform his mourning for her, again joined his army, and detailed Yūsuf Surūru-l-Mulk to proceed to Tabarkhinda to put down the insurrection of Fūlād. Mubārak Shāh after taking Lāhor and Jālandhar from Nuṣrat Khān gave them to Malik Allahdād Kālū Lodi. When³ he arrived near Jālandhar, Jasrat, having crossed the river Biāh, had engaged Allahdād Kālū⁴ at Bajwāra,⁵ and had defeated him. 297. Malik Allahdād had fled to the hill-country.

In this year the Sultān brought an army into Mīwāt against Jalāl Khān, and from thence despatching a force to operate towards Gwālīār and Itāwa, returned (to Dihlī). In this same year Shaikh 'Alī coming down into the Panjāb again caused disturbances there. Mubārak Shāh accordingly nominated 'Imādu-l-mulk to reinforce the Amīrs of that district. Shaikh 'Alī invaded the country from Shiwar to the banks of the Biāh, and taking great numbers prisoners and plundering, went to Lāhor. Zīrak Khān and the other Amīrs⁶ who were in Lāhor fortified themselves there, and fought repeated engagements with him, till, one night, the inhabitants of Lāhor were careless about their guards and sentries, and Malik Yūsuf Surūru-l-Mulk and Malik Isma'īl under cover of night succeeded in joining Zīrak Khān; then sallying from the fort,⁷ gave battle and were defeated. Shaikh 'Alī pursued them, some of the fugitives were put to death, and some were taken prisoners. remained there. And after some days, he came to Debālpūr, which Malik Yūsuf Surūru-l-Mulk was intending to abandon. Malik 'Imādu-l-Mulk¹ on hearing of this despatched his brother Malik Aḥmad from Tabarhinda to the fort of Debālpūr with orders to hold it. Shaikh 'Alī becoming aware of this returned from that direction: Sultān Mubārak Shāh proceeded as far as Sāmāna in order to quell these disturbances.² From Sāmāna he proceeded to Talaundi and thence to the ford of Pūhī, where he crossed the the Bīāh and came to Debālpūr. Thence he marched along the banks³ of the Rāvī, and Shaikh 'Alī crossed the Jhīlam and fled,⁴ Mubārak Shāh pursued him as far as the fortress of Shīwar and crossed the Rāvī near Tūlumba.⁵ Amīr Muẓaffar Khān, brother's son to Shaikh 'Alī, who was holding the fort with Shaikh 'Alī's troops, fought against the king for a month, and at last sued for quarter, and gave his daughter together with a large amount of money and valuables to the prince. A part of Shaikh 'Alī's forces who were besieged in Lāhor sought quarter from Shamsu-l-Mulk and evacuated the fort. As soon as Mubārak Shāh had completed the affair of Shīwar and the conquest of Lāhor, he proceeded with a small retinue to visit the holy shrines of the Shaikhs at Multān, and returning almost immediately came to Debālpūr and remained there for some days. Having regard to Shaikh 'Alī (as a source of danger), he gave the districts of Lāhor and Debālpūr to Maliku-sh-Sharq 'Imādu-l-Mulk, and taking away the districts of Baiāna from 'Imādu-l-Mulk he gave them to Shamsu-d-dīn. ⁶ The festival of Sacrifice. This is the festival held on the 10th day of Zū-l-ḥijjah. It is known also as the 'Idu-l-aẓḥā, see Qur'ān xxii. 33—38. It commemorates the intention of Ibrāhīm to sacrifice his son Isma'īl in obedience to the command of God. It is the chief of the Muḥammadan festivals and is called 'Idu-l-kabīr, the great festival, to distinguish it from the 'Idu-l-Fitr which is known as 'Idu-ṣ-ṣaghīr which ushers in the month of Shawwāl and celebrates the termination of the fast of Ramaẓān. conferred the office of vazir upon Sarwaru-l-Mulk and gave to Malik Kamālu-l-Mulk,¹ who was the Military Secretary (Nāib-i-Lashkar), charge of the civil administration in conjunction with Sarwaru-l-Mulk.

There was a hypocritical bond of fellowship between these two,² inasmuch as Sarwaru-l-Mulk had a grievous thorn rankling in his breast on account of the deprivation of Debālpūr, and bore a grudge against Mubārak Shāh: so that at such a juncture, seeing that he had less than ever to hope from him, he entered on a course of secret treachery and deceit. He entered into a conspiracy with the sons of Kāngū Khatri and Kajwī Khatri and Mirān Šadr Nāib-i-'Arz, (who for generations had been protégés of the Mubārak Shāhi family, and held several high offices) and also with another party of Muslim vagabonds, to seek an opportunity of destroying Mubārak Shāh.³

And in the year 837 H. (1433 A.D.)⁴ Mubārak Shāh built a city on the banks of the river Jamna,⁵ and gave it the name of Mubārakūbād (City of Prosperity), though in reality it should have been called Kharābābād (City of Ruin), and was so zealous in building it that he spared no pains in its superintendence. In the meanwhile news of the capture of the fortress of Tabarhinda reached the court, accompanied by the head of the slave Fūlād Turkbacha.⁶ Mubārak Shāh could not contain himself for joy at this intelligence, and proceeded by forced marches to Tabarhinda⁷ and returned thence speedily to Mubārakābād. In this year tidings arrived that hostilities were going on between Sultān Ibrāhīm Sharqī and Alp Khān, governor of Kālpī, who had re-

At this juncture Mubārak Shāh persisted in his invariable custom of visiting the site of the new city in season and out of season. One day when he had ridden out there with a body of attendants without ceremony, and was preparing to say the Friday prayers,² the infidels under Mirān Šadr, who had continually lain in wait for him at the instigation of Sarwaru-l-Mulk, seeking an opportunity (to slay him),³ with one accord entered the private apartment of Mubārak Shāh on some pretext or another, and Sidh Pāl,⁴ the grandson of the scoundrel Kajwī Khatri, put that auspicious monarch to a martyr's death. This event took place in the year 837 H. The days of his reign were thirteen years three months and sixteen days.

⁵ دجله Dajla or Dagla, as it may also be pronounced, is the Hiddekel of the Bible (Gen. ii. 14; Dan. x. 4) חֲדָקָל lit., the swift. The old Persian form is Tigrā, "swift as an arrow," whence is derived Tigris, the modern name of this river. According to Pliny (VI. 27), the river in the upper part of its course where it flowed gently was called Diglito, and lower down, where it is more rapid, on account of its velocity it is called Tigris, for the Medes call an arrow by this name. According to Gesenius, in modern Persian both the river Tigris and an arrow have the common name تیر tir, which in the Zend becomes Tedjer. See Gesenius Thes: also Smith Dict. G. R. Geog.

"The Tigris is navigable for light steamers up to Baghdād, but owing to the rapidity of the current, the traffic is all down stream carried on mainly by a primitive style of craft, which is broken up at Baghdād and transported by camels back to Mosul."

SULTĀN MUḤAMMAD SHĀH IBN I FARĪD KHĀN,

The brother's son of Mubārak Shāh ibn i Khizr Khān, whom Mubārak Shāh had adopted as his own son, ascended the throne in succession to Mubārak Shāh in the year ¹ 837 H. (1433 A.D.) and Sarwaru-l-Mulk, whose head was filled with treacherous designs, ostensibly owned his allegiance. Muḥammad Shāh, in spite of the foregoing circumstances, conferred upon him the title of Khān-i-Jahān and bestowed a khil'at upon him, he also appointed Mirān Ṣadr Mu'īnu-l-mulk, and for a short time winked at the doings of those infidels. Malikū-ṣh-Sharq Kamālu-l-mulk, who was co-partner with Sarwaru-l-Mulk in the vazīrship, elected to reside outside the city, and gave in his allegiance to Muḥammad Shāh. The second day after the accession Sarwaru-l-Mulk made some pretext for arresting ² certain of the servants of Mubārak Shāh, and put them to death, and left nothing undone to secure the overthrow of the family of Mubārak Shāh; moreover, he began to divide the country among his own partisans, giving the territory of Baiāna, and Amroha, and Nārnol, and Kuhrām, together with certain districts in the Doāb, to Sidh Pāl and Sidhāran Khatri who were the (actual) murderers of Mubārak Shāh. Rānūn the Black, a slave of Sidh Pāl, arrived in Baiāna with a large following, and attempted to enter the fort; but in the meantime Yūsuf Khān Auḥadī arrived from Hindwān,³ and giving him battle defeated him, and sent the greater portion of those infidels to hell. Their women and children fell as prisoners into the hands of the Muslims, and the head of Rānūn the Black was hung up over the gate of the fort. Inasmuch as Sarwaru-l-Mulk and his infidel horde began to commit violence, the Amīrs of Khizr Khān and Mubārak Shāh, who were scattered here and there about the country, in several places shewed symptoms of revolt and set on foot many insurrections. Sarwaru-l-Mulk had the self-same object, namely to damage the kingdom. Malik Allahdād Kāla Lodī, governor of Sambhal and Abār,⁴ and Malik Chaman¹ governor² of Badāon, grandson of Khān-i-Jahān, and Amīr 'Alī Gujrātī, together with some other Amīrs, raised a large following to avenge the death of Mubārak Shāh, and started towards Dihlī. Maliku-sh-Sharq, Kamālu-l-Mulk, and Saiyyid Khān, son of Saiyyid Sālim, who had received the title of Khān-i-Ā'zam from Mubārak Shāh, were appointed by the durbār to proceed against those Amīrs, and Malik Yūsuf, the son of Sarwaru-l-Mulk, together with Sidhāran and Kāngū were ordered to accompany Kamālu-l-Mulk. The Dihlī army crossed by the ford of Kīcha and came to Baran (Bulandshahr). Malik Allahdād and the other noted Amīrs having arrived at the township of Ahār desired to cross the Ganges without fighting and go where they could safely. But when they saw clearly that Malik Kamālu-l-Mulk was heartily bent upon taking vengeance upon Sarwaru-l-Mulk, they took courage and did not leave their positions. Sarwaru-l-Mulk becoming aware of this sent his lieutenant Malik Hushyār, under pretence of reinforcing Kamālu-l-Mulk, as a spy into their army. Yūsuf Khān and Malik Hushyār, and Sidhāran the infidel, entertaining suspicions regarding Kamālu-l-Mulk left the army and went to Dihlī: and the Amīrs of Sambhal and Badāon joined Kamālu-l-Mulk and came in great force to the ford of Kīcha. Sarwaru-l-Mulk was engaged in strengthening his fort. The following day the loyal Amīrs having crossed the Jamna encamped in the Bāgh-i-Jūd³ while the traitors and infidels sallied out from the fort and engaged them in battle, but suffered defeat in the very first onset and retreated to the fort, but before they could enter it a large number were put to death and most of the remainder were taken prisoners.

302. The day following this victory the Mubārak Shāhī Amīrs encamped near the fort of Sirī, and the greater part of the Amīrs who were inside the fort, came out and joined them. Fighting went on between the two parties for three months.

At the latter part of this year Zīrak Khān, Governor of Sāmāna died, and the country was confirmed to his son Muḥammad Khān. Muḥammad Shāh, although outwardly he held friendly relations with Sarwaru-l-Mulk, still in his inmost heart was in unison with his father's Amīrs. Sarwaru-l-Mulk became aware of this, and accordingly began to plot treachery against him also, and was only waiting his opportunity.

On the eighth of Muḥarram in the year 838 H. (1434 A.D.) Sarwaru-l-Mulk and the sons of the perfidious Mirān Šadr suddenly broke into the tent of the king with the intention of doing him a grievous injury, but at this moment Muḥammad Shāh became aware of their design; and with all despatch sent messengers to Kamālu-l-Mulk, while the attendants who were near the person of Muḥammad Shāh were on their guard, and killed the traitor Sarwaru-l-Mulk, and seizing the sons of Mirān Šadr executed them in presence of the darbār. The traitorons infidels blockaded themselves in their own houses. Kamālu-l-Mulk, accompanied by all the Amīrs, entered the fort by the Darwāza-i-Baghdād (Baghdād gate). The ruffian Sidh Pāl set fire to his house and property, and after performing the *jauhar*¹ which is a well-known custom expressed by that word in the Hindī language, went himself into battle and became food for the flames of the pitiless sword,² and his impure soul went to hell.³ Sidhāran Kāngū and the rest of the Khatrī confederation, were one and all taken prisoners, and were impaled near the *ḥaḡīra*⁴ (mausoleum) of Mubārak Shāh, and Malik Hushyār and Mubārak Kotwāl were executed along with them. The following day Kamālu-l-Mulk and the other noted Amīrs renewed their fealty to Muḥammad Shāh; Kamālu-l-Mulk obtained the rank of vazīr and Malik Chaman of Badāon received the title of Ghāzīu-l-Mulk, and was reinstated in his former position as governor of Badāon, Amroha being also added to his province; Malik Allahdād Lodī would not accept any title, the title of Daryā Khān however he accepted for his brother. Thus after settling the important affairs, Muḥammad Shāh gave durability to his rule, and conducted his Government in tranquillity.

¹ جواهر Jauhar or Jūhar जहर is a Hindī word derived from the words जीव jīw, and हार hara signifying taking one's own life. The custom of the Rājputs when reduced to the last extremity in warfare was in olden times to perform a rite of self-sacrifice known by this name: as for instance on the occasion of the siege and capture of Chitor by Sulṭān 'Alāu d-Dīn: "Huge piles of timber were raised up and set on fire. The women approached in funeral procession and threw themselves into the flames. The men arrayed themselves in saffron-coloured garments and rushed out of the fortress sword in hand; most of them were cut to pieces." The evident object of the rite was to protect the persons of the women from the indignities to which they would be submitted if they were to fall alive into the hands of the enemy.

And in the year 840 H. (1436 A.D.) he turned his attention towards Multān, and halted for some days at Mubārakpūr to give time for the Amīrs of the various districts to join him. When the Muḥammad Shāhī's troops were all assembled at Mubārakpūr he marched thence towards Multān, and after visiting the shrines of the holy men at that place¹ came to Dihlī. And in the aforesaid year, marching towards Sāmāna he despatched a force to proceed against Shaikhā Knūkhar.² Accordingly they laid waste his country and returned.³ In the year 841 H. (1437 A.D.) tidings arrived that the tribe of Langāhs had raised an insurrection in Multān, and in the meantime Sultān Ibrahīm Sharqī obtained possession of certain divisions of Dihlī, and the Rāi of Gwāliār and the other Rāis refused to pay the customary tribute. Muḥammad Shāh affected to be indifferent to this, and disturbances sprung up in all directions, and everyone was hankering after something. The Khānzādas of Mīwāt, who are the ancestors of Hasan Khān of Mīwāt, invited Sultān Maḥmūd Khiljī from Mālwa to assume the imperial power of Dihlī.

And in the year 844 H. (1440 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd arrived at Dihlī, and Muḥammad Shāh drew up his forces and sent out his son Saiyyid 'Alāu-d-Dīn to engage him in battle, giving the command of the force to Malik Buhlūl Lodī. Sultān Maḥmūd also appointed his two sons Ghiāsu-d-Dīn and Qadr Khān¹ to oppose them. A fierce battle resulting they at last agreed to make peace, and Sultān Maḥmūd taking advantage of that, and alleging as an excuse that he had seen in a dream that the kingdom of Multān was being ruined, marched in light order under cover of night towards Mālwa. Malik Bahlūl pursued him and seized a portion of his baggage and valuable equipment. Sultān Muḥammad was so pleased at the energy displayed by Bahlūl Lodī that he called him his son,² and bestowed upon him the country of Lāhor and Detālpūr.

And in the year 845 H. (1441 A.D.) he marched to Sāmāna, and having despatched Bahlūl to chastise Jasrat Khūkhar, returned to Dihlī. Jasrat concluded a peace with Malik Bahlūl and held out to him the pleasing prospect of becoming Sultān of Dihlī,³ till at last Bahlūl began to collect Afghāns from all directions and took forcible possession of a large number of parganas, then without any ostensible reason he picked a quarrel with Muḥammad Shāh and revolted against him, leading an army against Dihlī. He held Sultān Muḥammad for a considerable time closely besieged, but could not accomplish his purpose, and returned without effecting anything. In the meantime Muḥammad Shāh was afflicted with a grievous disorder,⁴ and the Amīrs who were at a distance of twenty krohs from Dihlī revolted against him, and sending for his son 'Alāu-d-Dīn who held a jāegīr in Badāun, and had left there on a hunting expedition at the foot of the hills, made him⁵ heir-apparent. And in the year 847 H.⁶ he passed away, the duration of his reign was fourteen⁷ years and some months, or thereabouts.

305. SULTĀN 'ALĀU-D-DĪN IBN I MUḤAMMAD SHĀH IBN I MUBĀRAK
SHĀH¹ IBN I KHIZR KHĀN,

In accordance with the testamentary disposition of his father succeeded to the throne, and Malik Buhlūl with the other Amīrs gave in their allegiance to him, and seeing that the indolence of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn was even greater than that of his father, a still more violent ambition to secure the throne began to work upon the excited fancy of Buhlūl.

In the year 850 H. (1445 A.D.) Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn made an excursion towards Baiāna; while on the road he heard a false rumour that the King of Jaunpūr was on his way to attack Dihlī, and without attempting to ascertain its truth returned in hot haste to Dihlī. In the year 851 H. (1447 A.D.) he went to where it is said that Firishṭa "makes a less venial mistake in insisting upon a twelve years' reign in spite of his own expressed figures of from "839 to 849" A. H. Briggs, pp. 332—339." This is not Firishṭa's error but is the fault of his translator. Firishṭa says clearly that Muḥammad succeeded to the throne on the very day on which Mubārak Shāh was assassinated (Bo. text, p. 309) that is, "on the 9th Rajab 837" (Bo. text, p. 308), so that while his date as regards the death of Muḥammad Shāh may be wrong, his calculation based upon the dates he gives is correct. I am not aware of any direct evidence that Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn ascended the throne in 847 H. The Tārīkh-i-Mubārak Shāhī, if Elliott's translation (Elliot, IV, p. 86) is to be trusted, says, "Upon the death of Muḥammad Shāh the amīrs and nobles assembled, and raised his son to the throne under the style of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn' and in a footnote on the same page referring to the conflict of testimony between Badāoni and Firishṭa as to the date of Muḥammad Shāh's death, he says: "Firishṭa seems correct in making it 849," and with this opinion I am inclined to agree. The mistake appears to have arisen from accepting the date given by Briggs in his translation of Firishṭa, instead of confirming it from Firishṭa himself, who gives 17th Jamādi I 824 as the date of Khizr Khān's death and Mubārak Shāh's accession, and states (Bo. text 309) that Mubārak Shāh reigned thirteen years three months and sixteen days. This would bring us to 837 H. not to 839 H. Therefore, unless there is evidence to shew that 'Alāu-d-Dīn came to the throne in 847 H. we are justified in accepting Firishṭa's plain and coincident statement that Muḥammad Shāh reigned twelve years and some months, dying in 849 H.

Badāon and elected to take up his abode there, and after making preparations for remaining there¹ returned to his capital Dihli.

And in the year 852 H. (1448 A.D.) having made his two brothers-in-law Shahnu-i-Shahr (City Constable) and Mir-i-Kūe (Superintendent of Roads) he returned to Badāon. A disturbance arose between those two brothers, and at last both were put to death by the people of Dihli. Husāin Khān who was Umdatul-Mulk (a Privy Councillor), and loyal to the Sultān, but from time to time spoke the direct truth to the Sultān in connection with the administration of State affairs, had for this very reason, fallen out of favour with the Sultān, and had been deposed from his office. Hamid Khān, Vazīr-i-mamlukat, (vazīr of the State) who had fled to Dihli fearing punishment at the hands of the Sultān, and dreading an attempt upon his life,² joined with Husain Khān in inviting Malik Buhlul and in raising him to the throne. He accordingly took advantage of the absence of the Sultān to proceed to Sirhind³ and having assumed to himself the title of Sultān read the Khutbah, and coming a second time with⁴ his whole army seized upon Dihli. Leaving his viceroy there he proceeded towards Dibālpūr, where he set about raising an army, and wrote a letter couched in hypocritical terms to Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn saying, "I am your obedient servant, and am undertaking all this marching backwards and forwards solely out of loyalty to your person." The Sultān in reply, wrote as follows: "The deceased King, Sultān Muḥammad Shāh, called you by the name of Son. There is neither fruit nor profit for me in sovereignty; living in solitary contentment at Badāon I resign the empire of Dihli⁵ to you. Sultān Buhlul leaving Dibālpūr ascended the throne of Dihli⁶ without fighting or opposition ; and Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn by the orders of Sultān Buhlūl was invested with the sovereignty of Badāon and the districts appertaining to it, towards the river Ganges as far as Khairābād and the foot of the hills, and used to read the Khutbah in his own name in those districts, till at last after some time, in the year 855 H. (1451 A.D.) he bade farewell to this world.¹ The duration of his reign was seven years and some months.

SULTĀN BUHLŪL [IBN I KĀLĀ]² LODĪ,

307. Who in the reign of Sultān Muḥammad Shāh had obtained the title of Khān-i-Khānān,³ in the year 855 H. (1451 A.D.) in concert with Ḥamīd Khān Vazīr (who, after the execution of Ḥusāin Khān at the hands of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, had gained possession of the family and relations of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn in Dihlī, and had brought the key of the fortress and had given it to Sultān Buhlūl) ascended the throne of sovereignty, and by degrees contrived to secure the imprisonment of Ḥamīd Khān,⁴ and in the same year proceeded to Multān to set that province in order.⁵

And in the year 856 H. (1452 A.D.) Sultān Maḥmūd Sharqī at the instigation of certain of the Amīrs of the party of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, came with a large army and laid siege to Dihlī, ¹ According to Firishta 'Alāu-d-Dīn died in Badāon in the year 883 H. (1478 A.D.) having reigned in Badāon some twenty-eight years.

Badāonī's statement is wrong in this particular. In 855 H. according to Firishta, 'Alāu-d-Dīn retired into obscurity, leaving the kingdom of Dihlī to Buhlūl Lodī, and reigned in Badāon for twenty-eight years, dying in 883 H. (Bo. text 316.) See n. 4 page 405.

² MS. (B) omits the words in brackets.

³ MS. (A) writes خطاب خانی یافتہ بود.

⁴ A long account of the way in which Ḥamīd Khān was taken prisoner is given by Firishta.

⁵ Firishta gives an account of the circumstances attending the birth of Buhlūl Lodī, telling us that the mother of Buhlūl Lodī, when close upon her confinement of him, was killed by the falling of her house upon her ; she was taken out lifeless, and to save the child the mother was instantly submitted to the Cæsarean operation and the child removed ; as it shewed signs of life it was carefully tended and grew up. (Bo. text p. 317).

and after severe fighting gained possession of it,¹ and Fath Khān Harawī² who was one of the most trusted Amīrs of Sultān Maḥmūd was killed. Sultān Maḥmūd³ not being able to bear up against this went to Jaunpūr; and the following year came into the same neighbourhood, proceeding from Jaunpūr to Itāwa, and concluded peace upon the following terms, namely, that so much of the kingdom of Dihlī as was under the sway of Mubārak Shāh should belong to Sultān Buhlūl, while that portion which was under the rule of Sultān Ibrāhīm Sharqī should revert to Sultān Maḥmūd;⁴ and having promised that after the rainy season he would give Shamsābād to Sultān Buhlūl,⁵ which was held by Jūnā Khān as the deputy of Sultān Maḥmūd, each of them went to his own country.

Sultān Buhlūl at the expiration of the appointed time marched against Shamsābād, took possession of it, and gave it to Rāi Kiran, ruler of Bhūnganw. Sultān Maḥmūd being displeased at this, proceeded again⁶ to the borders of Shamsābād and fought with Sultān Buhlūl.⁷ In the meantime Sultān Maḥmūd quitted this existence for the house of eternity, and Muḥammad Shāh, the son of Sultān Maḥmūd, was nominated to the kingdom of Jaunpūr in the room of his father, and having arranged peace upon the terms formerly agreed upon between Sultān Maḥmūd and Sultān⁸

³ MS. (A) reads here ... و کشته شدن او سلطان. Sultān Maḥmūd was not able to bear the fall of Fath Khān and his being killed.

⁶ MS. (A) درآمده.

⁸ Firishta says that Bibī Rāchī, the mother of Muḥammad Shāh Sharqī

308. Buhlul proceeded to Jaunpūr, and, inasmuch as Qutb Khān, the cousin of Sultān Buhlul had fallen a prisoner into the hands of Muḥammad Shāh,¹ Sultān Buhlul, in defiance of the existing treaty, again brought up his army against Muḥammad Shāh, who also leaving Jaunpūr came to Shamsābād and took it from the Hindūs by force,² and on the borders of Rāprī confronted Sultān Buhlul. Muḥammad Shāh was defeated and retreated towards Qanauj. Sultān Buhlul pursued him.³ And in the aforesaid year Sultān Husain Sharqī, ibn-i-Sultān Maḥmūd revolted against his brother Muḥammad Shāh, and seized the throne of Jaunpūr with the assistance of the Amīrs, and detailed ⁴ a large army to proceed against Muḥammad Shāh, whom they finally put to death on the banks of the Ganges in the vicinity of Rāj Gar. Sultān Husain made peace with Sultān Buhlul, and sending for Qutb Khān Lodī who was still in prison, from Jaunpūr, presented him with a horse and a robe of honour and sent him to Sultān Buhlul ⁵ and returned from Qanauj to Jaunpūr ⁶.

intervened, and arranged peace upon these terms, that Muḥammad Shāh should retain his father's kingdom, while Buhlul should be in undisturbed possession of all that he already held. ¹ See preceding page n. 4.

² There is a rather important difference here in the account given by Firishṭa (Bo. text p. 323) who writes: "When Sultān Buhlul arrived near Dihlī Shams Khātūn, the sister of Qutb Khān Lodī sent him a message, saying, "So long as Qutb Khān remains in the prison of Muḥammad Shāh Sharqī food and sleep is unlawful for thee O King." Accordingly Buhlul broke the truce, and came to Dihlī, whence he returned towards Jaunpūr. On his arrival at Shamsābād he took it out of the hands of Rāi Kiran, and gave it to Jūnān Khān who had arrived before him, and Muḥammad Shāh Sharqī also had come out to meet him, consequently the two Kings encamped near Sarsutī facing one another at close quarters, and engaged each other early and late." From this it appears that Shamsābād was taken by Buhlul from Rāi Kiran, whereas Badāonī makes it seem as though Muḥammad's forces re-conquered it. Firishṭa's account is undoubtedly the correct one as subsequent events show.

⁴ MS. (A) نامزد کرد.

⁵ The account of the circumstances given by Firishṭa show that Husain Khān started with his army under pretence of opposing Buhlul but changed direction to Qanauj. When Buhlul heard of this he had despatched a few of his Amīrs to meet Husain Khān, and himself took prisoner Jalāl Khān, brother of Husain Khān who was also coming out after his brother, and kept him as a hostage for Qutb Khān, for whom he was eventually exchanged (Bo. text, p. 323).

⁶ MS. (A) از قنوج بجانب جونیپور. The text and MS. (B) are wrong here.

Sultān Buhlūl also despatched Jalāl Khān, the brother of Husain Khān, whom he held in confinement as hostage for Qutb Khān, to Sultān Husain after conferring honours upon him. And after some years¹ Sultān Husain coming to the borders of Chandwār, fought a battle with Sultān Buhlūl, and having concluded a peace for three years again returned to his own country. At this juncture Ahmad Khān Jilwānī, the ruler of Baiāna read the Khutbah in the name² of Husain Khān; and Sultān Husain, upon the expiration of the period for which peace had been concluded, proceeded towards Dihlī with 10,000 cavalry and a thousand elephants. They met near a place called Bhatwāra, and Sultān Husain having agreed to peace encamped at Itāwa. Sultān Buhlūl came to Dihlī. The fact of these two kings being thus within a seven days' journey is not without its ridiculous side.

duties of mourning for him,¹ and having taken those districts from the sons of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, took possession of them himself, and thence went² to Sambal, and having taken prisoner Tātār Khān,³ the Governor of that place, sent him to Sāran,⁴ and with a large army and the number of elephants already mentioned, arrived at Dihlī in the month of Zū Hījjah, in the year 880 H.⁵ and encamped on the banks of the Jamna near the ford of Kichā.⁶ Sultān Buhlūl coming from Sihrind summoned⁷ Husain Khān, the son of Khān-i-Jahān from the vicinity⁸ of Mīrath, and despatched him to oppose Sultān Husain,⁹ while he himself held Dihlī against him. And on this occasion also, owing to the exertions of Qutb Khān, Sultān Husain agreed to peace, taking into his own possession the whole of the country on the further side of the Ganges;¹⁰ then relinquishing this side of the river to Sultān Buhlūl he returned. Sultān Buhlūl¹¹ seized his opportunity, and when Sultān Husain marched, crossed the river Jamna and captured some baggage and other property¹² which Sultān Husain, relying upon the truce, had left on the camping-ground: a certain proportion of the treasury also which was laden on elephants and horses, fell into the hands of Sultān Buhlūl, and as many as forty¹³ noted Amīrs of Sultān Husain's force, were taken prisoners, among others for instance, Qāzī Samā'u-d-Dīn, entitled Qutlugh Khān the Vazīr, who was the most learned of the doctors of his time.

1 MS. (A) reads بتعزیت او ba-ta'zīyat-i-ū which agrees with the words of Firishta (Bo. text, p. 325) and is far preferable to the reading of the text and MS. (B) بتقرب او bataqrīb-i-ū, i.e., on his account.

2 MS. (A) رفت. 3 Firishta calls him مبارک خان Mubārak Khān.

Sultān Buhlūl made over Qutlugh Khān in chains to Qutb Khān Lodī, and himself giving chase went as far as Shamsābād¹ in the Doāb, which was held by Sultān Husain, and seizing it, appointed commissioners² of his own over³ that country; this occurrence took place in the year 884 H. (1479 A.D.)⁴ the chronogram for that year was Nawīd-i-Kharābi (Tidings of ruin).⁵

And Sultān Husain seeing that he was being very closely pursued, determined to make a stand at Rāprī, and once more peace was agreed to between them upon the old conditions, namely, that each should rest contented with the countries of which he was in possession, and should retire. Upon the conclusion of this peace Sultān Husain remained at Rāprī, and Sultān Buhlūl at a place called Dhopāmaū'; and after a time Sultān Husain again collecting an army came up against Sultān Bahlūl, and a fierce engagement took place in the vicinity of Sonhār.⁶ Sultān Husain again suffered defeat, a great deal of treasure and valuables beyond computation falling into the hands of the Lodi party, and was a means of increasing their influence and power. Sultān Buhlūl left Dhopāmaū' for Dihli to mourn⁷ for Khān-i-Jahān who had died in Dihli, [and having conferred the title of Khān-i-Jahān upon his son, again returned to attack Sultān Husain, and reaching Rāprī fought a battle in which he gained a victory];⁸ and when Sultān Husain took refuge in flight a number of his family and Sultān Husain leaving Jaunpūr went by way of Banraich towards Qanauj, and engaged¹ Sultān Buhlūl for some time on the banks of the Rahab, and met with the defeat which had become a second nature to him. On this occasion his whole retinue and regalia fell into the hands of the Lodīs, while his chief wife Malika-i-Jahān, Bibī Khūnzā,² who was the daughter of Sultān 'Alāu-d-Dīn, and the grand daughter of Khizr Khān, was taken prisoner;³ Sultān Buhlūl treated that lady with the utmost respect and regard, and when he again attempted to conquer Jaunpūr, Bibī Khūnzā by some artifice effected her escape and joined her husband. Jaunpūr fell into the hands⁴ of Sultān Buhlūl. He gave it to Mubārak Khān Lūhānī, and himself proceeded to Badāon. Sultān Husain took the opportunity to march against Jaunpūr in full force: the Amīrs of Sultān Buhlūl evacuated it, and went to Qutb Khān Lodī who was in Mahjanli,⁵ and approached Sultān Husain with expressions of fealty, and by pretending to take his part kept him at bay till reinforcements arrived from Sultān Buhlūl. Sultān Buhlūl sent his own son Mubārak Shāh to the assistance of these Amīrs, while he himself also set out⁶ for Jaunpūr, following his son; Sultān Husain not being able to stand against him went to Bihār. Later on we read that "he died near Bhadānli one of the dependencies of Sakīt." Sakīt is in the Etah District of the N.-W. Provinces, and it is here according to Hunter (Imp. Gaz. XII. 146), that Buhlūl Lodī died. Abūl Fazl states (Āin-i-Akbarī text I. 532) that he died near the township of Saketh, but places Bhadāwah in the Sarkār of Sahār in the Āgra Sūbah, while he places Saketh in the Sarkār of Qanauj (see Āin-i-Akbarī (Jarrett) (II. 309 n. 3). Among Muhammadans it is a not infrequent custom, before embarking upon any important undertaking, to consult the Qur'ān, or the works of Hāfiẓ in this way. The word فَال fāl properly means a good omen, as opposed to طَيْرَة ṭīyarat a bad omen, this distinction is however not strictly observed. The prophet Muhammad directed his followers not to put faith in a bad omen, but rather to take a good one; on being asked the meaning of a good omen he said "a good word which any of you may hear: such as if a person in search of anything be addressed thus, O Finder!" (Mishkātū-l-Maṣābiḥ Mathew ii. 381) see also Lane s. v. فَال; also Lane's Modern Egyptians 259, where a full account of one of the methods of sortilege by the Zāirgah is given.

2 MS. (B) reads برادر دیگر another brother. Firishta gives a detailed account of the circumstances attending the accession of Sikandar; he says that most of the Lodī Amīrs favoured Ā'zam Humāyūn, and before Buhlūl's death practically forced him to summon Sikandar from Dihlī, intending to make a prisoner of him. This plot came to the ears of 'Umr Khān Shirwānī who was a friend of Sikandar, and he consequently agreed with the mother of Sikandar, who was in the camp at the time, to warn Sikandar of his danger. Sikandar accordingly made excuses from day to day, and eventually delayed coming so long that Buhlūl died. The Amīrs then held a consultation, most of them favouring Bārbak Shāh the eldest surviving son, but some leaning to Ā'zam Humāyūn: Zebā, the mother of Sikandar, spoke from behind a curtain in favour of her son, but was rudely repulsed by one 'Isā Khān a cousin of Buhlūl, who said, "the son of a gold worker's daughter is not fit to be king." Thereupon Khān-i-Khānān Farmalī rebuked him, and words ensued which led to a quarrel. Khān-i-Khānān took his party of Amīrs with him, and removed Buhlūl's corpse to Jalālī, summoning Sikandar from Dihlī where they placed him on the throne in the palace of Sultān Fīrūz on the banks of the Biāh, as Sultān Sikandar. He then sending his father's body to Dihlī, marched against 'Isā Khān and defeated him, but pardoned him (Firishta Bo. text 338-339).

Sultān Ḥusain collected an army, and marched from Belhār with a hundred elephants against Sultān² Sikandar, who for his part crossed the Ganges by the ford of Kantit³ and came to Chenār⁴ and from thence to Banāras. Sultān Ḥusain had arrived within seventeen krohs of Banāras when Sultān Sikandar marched against him rapidly.⁵ In the midst of his march Sālbāhan the Rāja of Patna, who was a trusty zemīndār, left Sultān Ḥusain and joined Sultān Sikandar.

Sultān Ḥusain drew up in line of battle, but suffered defeat and retired towards Patna.⁶ Sultān Sikandar left the camp, and pursued him⁷ with a hundred thousand light cavalry ; while thus engaged he learned that Sultān Ḥusain had gone to Bihār. Bāber says "there were thirty-three shocks that same day, and for the space of a month the earth shook two or three times every day and night." The date is not given, but the account follows closely upon that of the death of his mother, which he states occurred in the month of Muḥarram, and we may from the account reckon about 40 days afterwards so that it must have been early in the month of Ṣafar.

And whereas her buildings were excessively lofty, that which had been their highest points became the lowest.¹

From the time of Adam to the present time no such earthquake has ever been known.

And in the year 912 H. (1506 A.D.), after the rising of Canopus, he marched against the fortress of Ūntgarh,² and laid siege to it, and many of his men joyfully embraced martyrdom, after that he took the fort and gave the infidels as food to the sword; those who escaped the sword fed the flames of the fire of jūhar with their wives and children. He then cast down the idol temples, and built there a lofty mosque.

In the year 913 H. (1507 A.D.), after the rising of Canopus he proceeded with the object of reducing the fortress of Narwar.³ Whilst en route he fell in with the elephants and cavalry and infantry of Jalāl Khān Lodi,⁴ whom he had sent on in advance to clear the way,⁵ and whom he had appointed to reduce Narwar. Becoming suspicious of him, he set about overthrowing him, and made some pretext for dispersing his forces, and taking him prisoner sent him to the fortress of Sakkar;⁶ he then took Narwar, the garrison having capitulated. And in the year 914 H. (1508 A.D.) he constructed other forts round Narwar to increase its strength, and bestowing

Firishṭa states that the Sultān regarded Udītnagar as the key to Gwāliār which he wished to reduce (p. 338).

Muḥammad Khān, the grandson of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn of Mālwa, fearing his grandfather, came for safety to the Sultān, and was allotted the jāegir of Chanderī, while Prince Jalāl Khān was directed to ⁸ give him every assistance as an ally; and in this year orders were issued for the erection of palaces and rest-houses, and for the laying out of gardens ⁹ at intervals along the whole route from Āgra to Dholpūr, so that when he came back from his hunting expeditions he might rest and refresh himself ¹⁰ there. In this year Muḥammad Khān of Nāgor, influenced by the fact that certain of his relations ¹¹ had sought and obtained an interview with the Sultān, evinced great respect for the Sultān, reading the Khutbah in Nāgor in his name without raising any objection, ¹² so that in this way a new territory ¹³ came ¹⁴ into the possession of the Sultān.

Accordingly proclamations conveying tidings of this victory were written to all parts of the Kingdom; and Muḥammad Khān, the grandson of Sultān Nāṣiru-d-Dīn of Mālwa,⁶ was taken prisoner, and Chanderi was (nominally)⁷ placed under his authority, but Amīrs were appointed to supervise him so that they might be aware of all his movements, control his actions, and administer⁸ his jāegīr, then the Sultān proceeded on a hunting excursion towards Baiāna, and paid his respects to the various learned and holy men of those districts, who were at that time famous for their miracles and wonder-working,⁹ especially¹⁰ Saiyyid N'amatu-llāh and Shāikh 'Abdullāh Ḥusainī,¹¹ who was

It so chanced that the 'Alī Khān who has been spoken of above, once more practised his hypocrisy, and came out from the fort to oppose him. The Sultān pretended not to notice this, and treated Daulat Khān as though he were his own son, bestowing upon him a special robe of honour, with several horses and elephants, and proceeded towards the fort of 'Thankar,³ and from thence proceeding by way of the township of Bārī,⁴ he returned thence to Āgra. One of the poets of the reign of Sultān Sikandar was the Brahman [Dūnkar⁵] who, they say,⁶ in spite of being an infidel, used to give instruction in books of science.⁷ The following matla, (opening couplet) was spoken [and is a most auspicious *matla*⁸] by him in the metre of Mas'ūd Beg,

Had not thy glance been the dagger, my heart had not bled to Hindustān at the time of the ruin of Multān, and introduced the systematic study of the intellectual sciences into that country. Before their time, with the exception of the Sharḥ-i-Shamsīyah, and the Sharḥ-i-Ṣaḥāif¹ there were no books current in Hindustān which treated of logic and metaphysics. I heard also from my masters,² that more than forty expert and profoundly learned men have arisen from among the disciples of Shaikh 'Abdu-llāh, for example, Miyān Lādan, Jamāl Khān of Dihlī, Miyān Shaikh of Gwālīār,³ Mirān Sniyyid Jalāl of Badāon, and others. They say also that Sultān Sikandar, during the instruction of the aforesaid Shaikh 'Abdu-llāh, used to come⁴ and seat himself quietly in a corner unseen by the rest, fearing lest he should interrupt the lesson of the other students, and when the lesson was ended they used to exchange the customary salutation of *Salām 'alaikum*⁵ and mix freely with each other. 324.

And Shaikh 'Azizu-llah of Tulumba, who was a man of great probity and rectitude, had such an abundant genius and marvellous power of recollection,⁶ that no matter how difficult or minute the subject matter of a book which a student of intelligence might be reading, he would give his lesson in it without previously reading it; and that time after time when they came up for examination, and propounded the most inscrutable problems, the learned Shaikh would explain them on the instant while giving his lesson.

¹ The former of these two works was most probably the famous commentary by Qutbu-d-Din Maḥmūd bin Muḥammad Rāzī, on the Shamsīyah, a famous treatise on Logic composed by Najmu-d-Din 'Umar bin 'Alī Qazwīnī, who died A. H. 693 (1293 A. D.), see Hājī Khālīfah No. 7667. El-Saḥāif fī el-kalām, folia de metaphysica. The Sharḥ-i-Ṣaḥāif must be the commentary mentioned by Hājī Khālīfah and by him ascribed to Samarqandī. Miṣtāḥ-l-'ulūm (clavis doctrinarum), see Hājī Khalīfah 12578. This book was written by Sirāju-d-Dīn Abū Ya'qūb Yūsuf bin Abī Muḥammad bin Alī as Sikkākī who died 626 A.H. (1228 A.D.)

The book was divided into three parts, of which the first treated of grammatical inflection, the second of syntax, and the third of arrangement and composition of sentences. (علمی المعانی و البیان) 'Ilm al-ma'ānī wal bayān. (Regarding 'Ilmu-l-bayān, etc., see Garoin de Tassy Rhetorique des langues de l'orient Musulmān, pp. 1-5.)

A commentary on all three parts was written by Maulā Ḥusānu-d-Dīn al-Muwazzinī, and this is probably the commentary alluded to in the text. Other commentaries were written on the third part, of which Hājī Khalīfah mentions three as worthy of special notice.

³ Muṭawwal (commentarius longior). By this book is meant the commentary written by Sa'du-d-Dīn al-Taftazānī (who died 792 A. H.) on the book called Talkhīṣ-l-Miṣtāḥ. It was called by the name of Muṭawwal or long commentary because after its completion in A. H. 748 its author wrote a second commentary, an abbreviation of the first, and gave it the name of Mukhtaṣar or shorter commentary. (See H. K. II. p. 404).

⁴ All works written by Muslims commence with بسم الله Bism'illāh. In the name of God. The word تمت tammāt, stands for تمت الكتاب tammāt-il kitāb, the book is finished, and forms the last word, answering to our word 'Finis.' MSS. (A) and (B) write only بسم.

⁵ Hidāyah-i-Fiqh. (see Hājī Khalīfah 14366.)

⁶ Kāfiyah. The famous grammar known by this name is Al-Kāfiyat fī-l-naḥw (liber sufficiens) whose author was Shaiḫ Jamālu-d-Dīn abī 'Umar Uṣmān bin 'Umr, commonly known as Ibnu-l-hājib. (ob: 646 A. H.). For a full account of the work and its various commentaries see H. K. 9707.

*Madārik*¹ and other works, which are read up to the present day.² Sultān Sikandar also collected together learned men³ from all parts of the country to instruct him,⁴ placing on one side Shaikh 'Abd-u-llah, and Shaikh 'Azīzu-llah, and on the other *Shaikh*u-l-Nadiyah and his son *Shaikh*⁵ Bhakāri to discuss difficult points. Eventually it became clearly evident that the former pair of worthies were superior in oratory, while the two latter were the better writers. The death of Shaikh 'Abdu-llah occurred in the year 922 H.; the following chronogram was invented to commemorate it: Ūlāika lahum ud-darajātu-l-ulā.⁶

And among the poets of the time of Sikandar, was the afore-said Shaikh Jamāli Kanbawī of Dihli, to whom Sultān Sikandar was in the habit of submitting verses which he had written, for his opinion.

Speaking generally, he had many excellent points, he was a man who had travelled much, and had been honoured with the fellowship of our master the saintly Jāmī,⁷ may God sanctify his resting place, and had gained many advantages from⁸ him and won his approbation,⁹ and was moreover in the habit of submitting¹⁰ his poems to that revered master: The following verses are by him:

My constant partner is, ask then thy thought
Should'st thou desire, to bring thee news of me.

326. He also wrote a Tazkirah (Book of Memoirs) to recount the assemblies of some of the Shaikhs of Hindūstān, called the Sīyaru-l-ʿĀrifīn (Biographies of the Saints) which is not entirely free from defects and discrepancies. It commences from the venerable Khawājā³ Muʿīnu-l-Ḥaqq wau-d-Dīn Ajmīrī, and finishes with his own spiritual guide Shaikh Samāu-d-Dīn⁴ Kanbawī of Dihli, in addition to which it contains other matter both⁵ prose and poetry. His dīwān is made up of eight or nine thousand couplets.

SULTĀN IBRAHĪM BIN SULTĀN SIKANDAR LODĪ,

Ascended the throne in Āgra in the year 923 H. with the concurrence of the Amīrs, and Shahzāda Jalāl Khān ibn-i-Sultān Sikandar⁶ [was appointed to the rule of Jaunpūr and was styled by the title of Sultān, while Khān-i-Jahān Lūhānī⁷ governor of Rāpri came to Āgra] and blamed the Amīrs greatly for associating (Jalāl Khān) in the government⁸ of the kingdom; and after that he had pointed out to them the foolishness⁹ of this procedure orders were issued to the Amīrs of the eastern districts to seize Jalāl Khān and bring him to the Court. He however went from Jaunpūr to Kalpī and collected a large following, and after establishing the Khutbah and sikkah in his own name, assumed the title of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn. Aʿzam Hūmāyūn Shirwānī sided with him for a time, but eventually came and had an audience of Sultān Ibrāhīm. Sultān Ibrāhīm sent to the fortress of Hānsī certain of his brothers who were imprisoned, for instance Shāhzāda Isma'il Khān, and Husain Khān, and others,¹ and appointed for each of them food and clothing and two² servants from the private establishment. Then he proceeded in person with the object of conquering³ the Eastern districts, and came to Bhūn Gānw, and having settled the disturbances in Mawās⁴ came to Qanauj. There he nominated a large number of Amīrs to proceed against Jalāl Khān, who with thirty thousand cavalry and a certain number of elephants had gone off in the direction of Āgra. Malik Ādam Kākar was sent by the Sultān to defend Āgra, and certain other Amīrs arrived to support him. They succeeded in persuading Jalāl Khān, by making pleasing overtures and using attractive arguments, to surrender his paraphernalia of royalty and kingly splendour to the Sultān, in order that they might prefer his application for pardon of his past offences and obtain for him the Kalpī district as a jāegīr. Jalāl Khān instantly agreed, and made over his royal canopy, his kettle-drums, etcetera to Malik Ādam with instructions to convey them to the Sultān in the neighbourhood of Itāwa. 327.

¹ It will be remembered that A'zam Humāyūn was the eldest son of Sultān Sikandar Lodī, Isma'il and Husain were respectively the fourth and fifth sons, Jalāl being the second son, and Ibrāhīm the third.

Jai Chand, a Zemindār of Chartulī, a dependency of the pargana of Kol which was better known as Mawās, had fought against 'Umr Khān the son of Sikandar Khān Sūr and had slain him. Accordingly Malik Qāsun Hākīm of Sanbhal proceeded against him and put that rebel to death, and having quelled that sudden rebellion came and joined the king at Qanauj.

On the strength of Firishta's statement the above translation is given, and I would suggest that the text should read آن مفسدان مواس را.

The Sultān would not agree to his proposal of peace, and despatched a large army to oppose Jalāl Khān, who fled in consternation and took refuge¹ with the Rāja of Gwāliār, and the Amīrs of Sikandar's party, who had heretofore been a source of weakness to the administration of the empire, one and all owed allegiance to the Sultān. The Sultān experienced² a revulsion of feeling with regard to Miyan Bhoh, who was the chief of the Amīrs of Sikandar, and had been his vazīr and privy councillor, accordingly he cast him into chains and sent him to Malik Ādam; however, he treated his son with kindness and advanced him to the high offices formerly held by his father. Miyan Bhoh died in prison, and A'zam Humāyūn Shirwānī, the Governor of Karra, was sent with thirty thousand cavalry and three³ hundred elephants to attempt the reduction of Gwāliār. Jalāl Khān fled from Gwāliār and went to Mālwa to Sultān Maḥmūd of Mālwa. After the arrival of the Sultān's troops Rāi Vikramājī the son of Rāi Mān Singh,⁴ who, after the decease⁵ of his father, held the government of Gwāliār, was not able to cope with them, and could not properly defend the fortress. In those days Sultān Ibrāhīm becoming distrustful of the old Amīrs, imprisoned the greater number of them,² and expelled (others) in different directions; and inasmuch as Jalāl Khān could not get on with Sultān Maḥmūd of Mālwa, he fled from Mālwa and came to the country of Kara Kanka,³ where he fell into the hands of a tribe of the Gonds,⁴ who took him prisoner and sent him as a present⁵ to the Sultān who ordered him to be taken to Hānsī and imprisoned with his brothers. While on the way thither he drank of the draught of martyrdom.

The draught of sovereignty and glory is so sweet
That for its sake kings will shed the blood of their brethren; Shed not the blood of the afflicted in heart for the sake of kingdom,
For they will pour the selfsame draught into the cup for thee.⁶

After some time, in accordance with the orders of Sultān Ibrāhīm, Ā'zam Humāyūn Shīrwānī, together with his son Fata Khān, abandoned the siege of Gwālīār Fort which he was within an ace of taking, and came to Āgra, where both were made prisoners. Islām Khān the son of Ā'zam [Khān]⁷ Humāyūn, gathered together⁸ a following in Karra by means of his father's Sultān Ibrāhīm accordingly despatched Aḥmad Khān, the brother of Ā'zam Humāyūn Lodī, in command of a vast army,² to oppose the Amīrs who had fled from his camp and had joined Islām Khān. With him also he sent³ other 329. Khāns of eminence, such as Khān-i-Khānān Farmalī, and others of similar rank. Near the township of Bāngarmau, in the neighbourhood of Qanauj,⁴ Iqbāl Khān, the chief cavalry commander under Ā'zam Humāyūn, with five thousand cavalry and some splendid elephants, broke out of ambushade and attacked the forces of the Sultān, and after throwing them all into confusion⁵ withdrew (into ambush). The Sultān by way of precaution despatched⁶ a further force to their assistance, but the enemy, who had about forty thousand cavalry, well armed, and five hundred elephants, shewed a firm front against them, until Naṣir Khān Luhānī with other generals arrived from the direction of Bibār and engaged the enemy on both sides. A fierce conflict ensued between the two armies, such a conflict as baffles description, and after a severe struggle⁷ the rebels were defeated. Islām Khān was killed and Sa'id Khān Lodī was taken prisoner, thus the rebellion was quenched.

In the meanwhile, many of the eminent Amirs of royal descent, as for example Āzam Humāyūn Shirwānī, and Mīyān Bhoh, the Vazīr of Sultān Sikandar, departed from this world in the confinement of the prison-house.¹

Mīyān Husain⁴ Farmalī was assassinated in Chanderī, at the instigation of the Sultān, by certain ruffianly Shaikh Zādas of that place, and Daryā Khān Lūhānī, governor of Bihār, and Khān-i-Jahān Lodī being alarmed,⁵ became disaffected. After a short time Daryā Khān died, and his son Bahādur Khān turned rebel and occupied the place of his father. The revolted Amirs made common cause with him, so that he collected a force of nearly a hundred thousand cavalry in the vicinity of Bihār, and gained possession of that country,⁶ assuming the title of Sultān Muḥammad,⁷ establishing the Khutbah and sikka in his own name. His army penetrated as far as the country of Sambal, and brought it within the area of their control.⁸ The Khutbah was read in his name in Bihār and the territories adjacent, for some time. It so happened that the son of Daulat Khān Lodī, whose name was Khān-i-Khānān⁹ came from Lāhor to Āgra to visit the Sultān, but being suspicious of his intentions fled from his court, and went to his father. Daulat Khān, seeing no hope of obtaining release from the (wrath of the) Sultān, sent that same son of his¹⁰ to Kābul. He accordingly did homage to the supreme King, Zahirud-Dīn Bābar, and induced him to advance against Hindūstān. Eventually Khān-i-Khānān laid a complaint¹ against his father before the supreme King Bābar, and poisoned his mind against him, and led to discord between them, as will be related if the Most High God so will it. Khān-i-Khānān was living up to the date of the rebellion of Sher Shāh, but at last died in prison. Sultān Muḥammad departed to the world of permanence from Bihār, and the Amīrs on all sides rebelled against Sultān Ibrāhīm, and great damage was inflicted upon the kingdom. The pillars of the empire began to totter,² and the standard of the fortune of King Bābar floated high.

The following is a brief epitome of the matter: Daulat Khān and Ghāzi Khān his son, together with the other noble Amīrs of Sultān Ibrāhīm, sent 'Alam Khān Lodī to Kābul, bearing despatches to Zahīru-d-Dīn Bābar Pādishāh, inviting him to attempt the conquest of Hindūstān. Accordingly Bābar Pādishāh appointed a number of his own Amīrs to accompany 'Alam Khān, with orders to advance and conquer that country. Having conquered Siālkot and Lāhor with its dependencies, they represented the condition of affairs (to Bābar) and the following qiṭ'ah was written to commemorate the date of the conquest of Hindūstān.

Verse.

Zahīru-d-Dīn Muḥammad Shāh Bābar,
In fortune Sikandar, in force a Bahrām,
By his fortune conquered the country of Hind,
The date of this was Faṭḥ badaulat.³ (Victory by fortune).

Bābar Pādishāh marching continuously, arrived at the banks of the river Indus, and drew up the whole force, composed of ten thousand [veteran] cavalry⁴ in that camp after passing the troops in review. In the interval, Daulat Khān and Ghāzi Khān had turned back with thirty thousand veteran⁵ cavalry composed of Afghāns and other tribes, and had occupied the town of Kalānūr, and prepared to engage Bābar's Amīrs at

Lāhor, while Amīr Khusrū, who had strengthened the fortress of Siālkoṭ, evacuated it as soon as Ghāzī Khān arrived, and took refuge in flight to the camp. Some days afterwards Bābar arrived at Siālkoṭ where he encamped [and after laying waste the township of Siālkoṭ founded Dholpur.]¹ 'Ālam Khān proceeded to Dihli by order of Bābar, and encountering Sultān Ibrāhīm, made² a night attack upon the army of the Sultān; and Jalāl Khān with certain other Amīrs arrived in the course of that night and joined 'Ālam Khān. Sultān Ibrāhīm did not stir from his tent till dawn. The followers³ of 'Ālam Khān, fancying they had secured an easy victory, were scattered in all directions, only a small number remained⁴ with 'Ālam Khān. Sultān Ibrāhīm, urging an elephant forward, attacked the enemy's centre, who could not withstand⁵ his attack. The faithless 'Ālam Khān passing through⁶ the Doāb came to Sihhind, and thence fled for refuge to the fortress of Gungūna,⁷ one of the dependencies of Malot,⁸ at the foot of the hills. Dilāwar Khān Lūhānī separated from him, and joined the service of Bābar Padishāh, and became one of his faithful adherents. 'Ālam Khān also after some time came and had an interview with Bābar, who, in accordance with his former custom, gave him an honourable reception, and as he was halting at the time of the interview he distinguished him with a robe of honour and other marks of favour; and when he pitched camp in the neighbourhood of Kalānūr, Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā and other Amīrs⁹ came from Lāhor and joined him. Thence he proceeded to the fortress of Malot in which Ghāzī Khān [and Daulat Khān were, and besieged it, and Ghāzī Khān and Khān-i-Khānān]¹⁰ determined upon flight and left the fort. Daulāt Khān hastened to tender his submission, and his faults were ¹ pardoned as on former occasions; and on the day of public audience when they brought him into the presence with two swords tied round his neck, orders were given that he was not to be brought in in that (humiliating) manner. Some few days after this occurrence Daulat Khān, who had been imprisoned by Bābar, died in prison⁵ and Bābar proceeded to the Siwālik hills in pursuit of Ghāzi Khān, and encamped ⁶ at the foot of the Dūn,⁷ which is a very high hill, Ghāzi Khān was not to be found. Bābar accordingly returned stage by stage to the frontiers of Śīhrind, and pitched his camp on the banks of the Ghaghar;⁸ thence he came to the borders of ⁹ Sāmāna and Sanām, and gave orders to Amīr Kittah Beg to ¹⁰ proceed to within a short distance of the camp of Sultān Ibrāhīm, who, after the defeat of 'Ālam Khān, had stood fast ¹¹ near Dihli, and bring intelligence of the position and strength of his army; and at this camp Baban the Afghān who had been in revolt came and had an interview (with Bābar). From this camp also Shāh-zāda Muḥammad Humāyūn Mirzā, together with Khwāja Kalān Beg and other notable Amīrs, were despatched against Ḥamid Khān the Khaṣṣ-i-Khail (Chief of Cavalry) of Sultān Ibrāhīm, who was advancing at the head of a force from Hiṣṣār Firoza to give them battle. They proceeded by forced marches, and a severe engagement took place. Ḥamid Khān was defeated, many of his men being either killed or taken prisoners.¹ The sarkār of Hiṣṣār Firoza with a revenue of two crores,² was given as a reward to the Shāh-zāda, and Bābar Pādīshāh encamped on the bank of the Jamna, two marches from Shāhābād, and detailed Khwāja Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā, and Sultān Juvaid Mirzā³ Birlās to oppose Dā'ūd Khān and a body of Amīrs of the army of Sultān Ibrāhīm, who had crossed the Jamna with five or six thousand cavalry. Accordingly they also crossed the Jamna and gave the Afghāns a second drubbing, killing them and taking them prisoners, while the remnant of the sword took refuge in the camp of Sultān Ibrāhīm.

Marching thence, having drawn up his right and left wings and centre,⁴ King Bābar reviewed them in person. Eight hundred gun-carriages⁵ had been prepared in one day. Ustā⁶ 'Alī Qulī the Artillerist, acting upon my orders, had followed the custom of the Turkish artillery, and bound together the gun-carriages with chains and raw-hide thongs, twisting them into the form of a whip-lash.⁷ And in the interval between each pair of gun-carriages six or seven shelter parapets⁸ were placed, so that on the day of Bābar Padishāh also, having arrayed his army with all the pomp and circumstance of war, and shewing a firm unbroken front, gave orders detailing from the left wing Amīr Qarā Qurchī and Amīr Shaikh 'Alī, with certain other Amīrs, and from the right wing, Walī Qizil and Bāba Qushqah, with the whole force of Muḡhūls, to form two parties and attack the enemy in the rear, while the Amīrs of the right and left wings in a body, and from the picked troops,⁴ Amīr Muḡammad Gokultāsh, and Amīr Yūnas 'Alī, and Amīr Shāh Manṣūr Birlās, with other famous Amīrs, should lead the front attack: and since the Afghāns [were specially observant of the right wing, Amīr 'Abdu-l-'azīz, who was with the reserve, was ordered by king Bābar to reinforce the right wing],⁵ and when he got within bowshot of the enemy,⁶ the bodies of the enemies took to themselves wings, and the bird of the soul of many of them took flight from the cage of the body, while the wings of others⁷ were clipped by the shears of the two-edged sword.

In the meanwhile Rānā Sānkā and Ḥasan Khān Mīwātī raised to the throne one of the sons of Sultān Sikandar Lodī, named Sultān Muḥammad, with the title of Pādshāh, and started on an expedition against the territories of Bābar with a large following and vast⁹ army.

Marching by way of Basāwar¹ they arrived in the neighbourhood of Faṭhpūr, otherwise known as Sikrī.² Nizām Khān, the Governor of Baiāna made representations to the Court of Bābar and gained a certain degree of influence. Rafī'u-d-Dīn Ṣafwī, who was one of the most powerful Saiyyids of Balkh,³ and the chief⁴ of the traditionists, and who, having come to Hindūstān in the reign of Sultān Sikandar Lodī, had been given the title of Ḥaẓrat-i-Muqaddas (His Holiness), came and had audience of the Sultān and tendered his service. Tārtār Khān Sārang Khānī also, after that Rānā Sānkā seized the fortress of Khandhār, and the infidels had got the upper hand, first of all sent a representation to King (Bābar) saying, I intend to surrender the fortress of Gwāliār; but when Khwāja Raḥīm⁵ Dād and Shaikh Khūran and a further party also arrived, he was ashamed (of this weakness). This party then, by the guidance of Shaikh Muḥammad Ghaṣṣ, who was unrivalled in his time, and was the chief authority on the science of da'watu-l-asmā,⁶ entered the fort by some skilful stratagem and took it from Tātār Khān whether he would or no, and sent him into the presence of Bābar Pādishāh. In just this same way also Muḥammad Zaitūn the Afghān gave up the fort of Dholpūr to⁷ the Amīrs of Bābar, and coming in had an interview with the King. In the meanwhile, Rānā Sānkā⁸ had arrived on the confines of Baiāna and was doing damage to the country, and had, after a halt of a few days, reached Faṭhpūr; Bābar Pādishāh, with a small body of the soldiery which he had with him, left the capital of Āgra with the object of engaging him in battle. He also wrote⁹ a despatch to summon Shāhzāda Muḥammad Humāyūn Mirzā, ordering him to leave Jaunpūr in charge of certain eminent Amīrs, and to come himself with all speed to take part in that war; the victorious Prince, having taken the country of Haraud¹⁰ and

At this same time, that pattern for the great³ and noble, Khawāja Khāwind Naqshbandī arrived from Kābul, and the Amīrs sitting in council determined by a majority, that, seeing that the army of Rānā Sānkā is currently reported to exceed in multitude the ants and locusts, it appears advisable to strengthen the fortress of Āgra, and that, leaving it in charge of a garrison, the sovereign of Islām should proceed in his own excellent person towards the

Moreover, inasmuch as at the time of his accession he made present of trays filled with gold, another chronogram was invented in the words Kishtī-i-Zar ('Tray of gold). After disposing of all matters of importance he led an army against the fortress of Kālinjar,⁴ and,⁵ after quelling the insurrection of Sultān 'Ālam ibn-i-Sultān Sikandar Lodī, who had raised a revolt in Jaunpūr, returned to Āgra and made a great feast, at which entertainment twelve thousand people were distinguished by the bestowal of robes of honour.

was captured. Sending him to the fortress of Baiāna, orders were given for his eyes to be put out. The pupil of his eye remained uninjured however, and shortly after, he escaped from prison and fled for refuge to Sultān Bahādur of Gujrāt. It is said that at the time when Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā joined Sultān Bahādur, the latter was engaged in besieging Chitor, and the weather was exceedingly hot. Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā was seized with a pain at the heart,¹ for the cure of which the physicians declared gulqand (confection of roses)² to be indispensable. Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā begged Sultān Bahādur to send him a piece of this gulqand. He accordingly summoned his sharbatdār (preparer of beverages), and enquired how much gulqand there had been brought with the camp; he replied that there must be more than twenty cart loads. The whole of this he sent to the camp of Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā,³ and apologetically explained that this amount had been estimated as the probable requirements of the army, if it were not sufficient he begged to be excused. It eventually transpired that the juice of the gulqand used to be extracted for his use, and that for this reason there were⁴ so many carts accompanying him. Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā, with his two sons Ulugh Mirzā and Shāh Mirzā, proceeded to Qanauj and laid the foundations of revolt, and when the king, now deceased, wrote and despatched to Sultān Bahādur letters summoning Muḥammad Zamān Mirzā, Sultān Bahādur sent back a discourteous reply;⁵ he accordingly determined upon the conquest of Gujrāt. Bahādur, having collected an army to reduce the fortress of Chitor and oppose Rānā Sānkā, engaged him in battle, and besieged him. Tātār Khān Lodī being despatched by him, came and gained possession of the fortress of Baiāna, extending his depredations as far as Āgra; and after a fierce

Then Bahādur, in concert with the Zamīndars of the country³ of Sorath, collected a force and proceeded towards Aḥmadābād. ⁶ MS. (A) معسكر ساخته.

⁷ This معما mu'ammā or enigma requires explanation: The English version is naturally meaningless.

The words in the original, رومي خان Rūmīkhān, contain as will be seen the word ميخ mikh between the syllables Rū...ān. These form the word روان rawān, one meaning of which is life, for which the synonym in Persian is جان jān. So the writer says: Place the word mikh in his life (روان rawān), and you have his name رومي خان Rū mikh ān, i.e., Rūmī Khān.

he reduced ¹ that fortress, but Jalāl Khān escaped by means of a boat, and joined Shīr Khān who was engaged in conflict ² with Naṣīb Shāh Governor of Bangāla. Humāyūn ³ Pādshāh arrived, after that the Governor of Bangāla had been wounded in battle with Shīr Khān. Naṣīb Shāh ⁴ submitted himself to Humāyūn, and acted as his escort. Having entrusted the Government of Jaunpūr to Mir Hindū Bēg, with the rank of Amīru-l-Umarā, and a golden throne, he proceeded by way of Garhī, ⁵ a narrow pass separating the countries of Bihār and Bangāla, which Qutb Khān the son of Shīr Khān and Khawass Khān, the well-known servant of Shīr Khān, had fortified, and came into Bangāla. Shīr Khān not being able to withstand him, left by way of Chahār Khand to the fortress of Rohtās, and fell upon the rear of Humāyūn's army, and gained possession of the fortress of Rohtās by crafty means, in the following manner. He alleged as a pretext that he had a large number of families ⁶ with him, and having placed two thousand armed Afghāns in closed litters ⁷ sent them towards the fort. The Rāja of Rohtās being fired with avaricious designs upon the wealth and families of the Afghāns threw open the gates of the fort. Then the Afghān soldiers who were concealed in the litters leapt out, and entering the fort, ⁸ put them all to the sword. ⁹ 349.

³ Dele را MSS. (A) (B).

⁴ The Persian text is rather obscure, this seems to be the meaning.

⁵ MSS. (A) (B) کوهی, see Elliot and Dowson IV. 367 n. 2.

⁶ The text reads بسی خود را درانجا, with two footnote variants بسی and بسی. The meaning is not clear, but from the Tārīkh-i-Shīr Shāhi this appears to be what is meant. See Elliott and Dowson IV. 357.

A still better reading however suggests itself namely بتقریب آنکه بسی الخ. instead of بتقریب آنکه. We should then translate: "And inasmuch as he had very many families with him obtained possession of the fort in the following manner."

⁷ The محفة Mihaffa is, as its name implies, a litter so closed in that the curtains surround on all sides the sitter upon it. See Lane s. v. حف.

⁸ MS. (A) reads در آمده و بر آمده.

⁹ Regarding the truth, etc. (See MS. Copy).

The climate of Bangāla proved so extremely suitable to Humāyūn, that he changed the name of Gaur to Jaunatābād (The realm of Paradise), and having halted there for (two or)¹ three months returned. In the meanwhile Shīr Khān's affair was assuming large proportions, and his following was increasing. He wrote a letter to Humāyūn, saying, 'all these Afghāns are the servants and retainers of His Majesty the King, and beg to be granted jāegīrs,² if the king will think about a jāegīr for them, then it will be well, but if not, hunger will drive them to open revolt. Up to the present time I have kept them in check, but now they no longer obey me, and the proverb is well-known. The hungry man will throw himself upon the sword. For the rest whatever the king says is law.'

Humāyūn, when he grasped the contents of the letter, saw clearly what its object was, and seeing that the opportunity had passed by,³ and considering the bareness of equipment and inefficiency⁴ of his army, which had recently been doubled, many horses and camels having died, while the remainder were so jaded and emaciated that they were of no use whatever, he set about devising some remedial measures. Mīrzā Hindāl, who had accompanied the king as far as Mongīr, was despatched to Āgra to put down the rebellion⁵ of Muhammad Sultān Mīrzā, Ulugh Mīrzā, and Shāh Mīrzā, who had fled and had done great mischief in the Dihlī country, and were now returning. Muhammad Zamān Mīrzā, after that Sultān Bahādur was drowned in the sea owing to the treachery of the Firangīs,⁶ could not accomplish anything, and again sought refuge with Humāyūn.

³ بعد از خرابی بصره. Ba'd az kharābī-i-Baṣra. After the ruin of Baṣra. A proverbial expression equivalent to the English "shutting the stable door after the horse is stolen." For the story from which the proverb arises see Sharḥ-i-Nahju-l-Balāgha by 'Abdu-l-Ḥamīd bin Abī-l-Ḥadīd al Mu'tazilī. When Alī ibn Muḥammad Ṣāhebu-z-Zanj besieged Baṣra in the year 255 H. Aḥmad Abūl-Abbās, son of Al-Muwaffaq b-Illāh came up and opposed him, but not until Baṣra was ruined. Hence the proverb. See Arabum Proverbia. Freytag III, p. 129, No. 774.

And in the year 945 H. Mīrzā Hindāl, at the instigation of certain turbulent innovators,¹ put to death Shaikh Buhlūl, the elder brother of Shaikh Muḥammad Ḡhaṣṣ of Ḡwālīār, who was one of the chief exponents of the art of invocation and incantation,² and who enjoyed the full confidence and friendship of Humāyūn. The year in which this event occurred was commemorated by the chronogram Faqad māta Shahīdan.³ Verily he died a martyr's death.

Mīrzā Hindāl in this year read the Khutbah in his own name in Āgra. Humāyūn despatched five thousand picked men to reinforce Jahāngīr Bēg the Mughūl, and making over the rule of that country to him, with permission to read the Khutbah should occasion arise, set out for Āgra, and, all unprepared as he was, reached Jausā,⁴ which is a village on the bank of the Ganges. The Amīrs of Jaunpūr and Chinār came in and offered to tender their services. Shīr Khān seized the head of the road, and being aware of the distress of the army, placed between it and his own army a canal,⁵ which joined the Ganges, and, owing to the rains, was quite full of water, and for three months encamped over against the King. It is said that during this period when they were confronting each ² MS. (A) reads دعوت اسما و سحر da'wat-i-Asmā wa sحر, "the invocation (of the attributes of God) and magic." Da'wah is said in the Jawāhiru l-Khamsa to be used for several purposes, establishment of friendship or enmity, for the induction of sickness and death, or for the cure of disease, for the accomplishment of desires temporal or spiritual, and to secure victory in battle.

By اسما Asmā is meant the names or attributes of the Deity; they are of two categories, the Asmāu-l-jalāliyyeh or "terrible attributes" and the Asmāu-l-jamāliyyeh, "amiable attributes." For a full account, see Hughes, Dict. of Islām articles DA'WAH and MAGIC.

(A) reads رهائي rahā'e. We should read زهابي rahābe, in the sense of a canal or aqueduct. See Elliott and Dowson IV. 370n.

351 other, Humāyūn one day sent Mulla Muḥammad 'Aziz,¹ who was an old friend of Shīr Khān, as an ambassador.² Shīr Khān was at that moment with his sleeves³ rolled up, and with a spade in his hand, in spite of the heat, was busy preparing the fort and entrenchments.

When Mulla Muḥammad came near he washed his hands, and having ordered a *shāmiāna*⁴ to be pitched, sat on the ground unceremoniously, and after hearing the King's message said, "Take this one message from me to the King and say: 'You yourself desire war, but your army does not, I on the other hand, do not desire war,⁵ but my army does: for the rest the decision is the King's.' " Then he sent Shaikh Khalil,⁶ one of the descendants of the venerable Shaikh Farīd Ganj-i-Shakkar, may God sanctify his soul, who was the spiritual guide of Shīr Khān, to Humāyūn, and made overtures of peace to him, representing that he was willing to give up to Humāyūn's representatives the whole country with the exception of Bangāla, and would have the Khutbah and sikka established in Humāyūn's name. This agreement was ratified between them by an oath on the Divine Word, and Humāyūn's mind was at peace with regard to Shīr Khān.

A bridge was ordered to be thrown across: but Shīr Khān was plotting treachery and deceit.

I flee from the camel of the heavens and the room of the earth,
Because there are maddened camels surrounding that room.

The following morning he surprised and attacked the army of Humāyūn, without giving them time to draw up in line. After a short skirmish Humāyūn's army was defeated, and the Afghāns arriving first¹ at the head of the bridge broke it down, while their artillerists and archers seated in boats kept the army under a perfect hail of fire, drowning² them in the ocean of destruction. Muḥammad Zamān Mīrzā was overwhelmed by the tempest of death, and Humāyūn urged his horse into the water and was in dread of drowning, in fact was on the point of drowning, when a water carrier³ came to his aid and rescued him from that whirlpool of destruction. Then he turned towards Āgra. Shīr Khān wrote⁴ 352. this verse upon that event:—

Thou givest the army of Humāyūn to the fishes

Although the master (Ustād) has [this second verse]—⁶

intending to capture Āgra. Kāmran Mīrzā, prior to the affair of Jausā, after hearing of the victory of Shīr Khān and the rebellion of Mīrzā Hindāl against Humāyūn, returned from Qandahār to Lāhor, and leaving there came to Āgra, which he reached in the year 946 H. Mīrzā Hindāl himself, before the arrival of Mīrzā Kāmran, in the absence of Humāyūn, laid siege to Dihlī, in which Mīr Fakhr 'Alī and Mīrzā Yādgār Nāṣir had fortified themselves; but not meeting with any success joined hands with Mīrzā Kāmran. Mīr Fakhr 'Alī also came in and had an interview with him, but Mīrzā Yādgār Nāṣir would not leave the fort. Eventually Mīrzā Hindāl separating from Mīrzā Kāmran proceeded to Alwar. When Humāyūn heard these tidings, he became still more despondent,¹ till that eventful defeat took place:² after the defeat at Jausā³ he proceeded by forced marches, accompanied by a few horsemen, and arrived unawares at the tent of Mīrzā Kāmran in Āgra. The Mīrzā also knew nothing of his coming; both brothers upon recognising each other burst into tears.⁴ Afterwards Hindāl Mīrzā and Muḥammad Sultān Mīrzā and his sons, who had for a time shewn hostility, came in and offered their submission for certain considerations: Their faults were pardoned and they sat in consultation. Mīrzā Kāmran ostensibly had this intention, that, inasmuch as the army of the Panjāb had gathered fresh force, Humāyūn should grant him leave to proceed against Shīr Khān and endeavour to take vengeance on him, while the King should remain in ease and tranquillity at the Capital. When Humāyūn declined to accede to this proposal, the Mīrzā put forward a claim to proceed to⁵ the Panjāb, and urged an infinity of reasons, giving colour to the suggestion that a refusal would cause him insupportable annoyance. Accordingly Humāyūn acceded⁶ to all his requests, saving only his return; and Khwāja Kalān Bēg was exerting his efforts to procure the return of Mīrzā Kāmran to the Panjāb: so that this argument was carried on for six months and nothing was settled.⁷ In the meantime Mīrzā Kāmran was taken ill with a complication of severe diseases,¹ and when the diagnosis was arrived at that the source of the disease was a poison, which had been poured into his life's cup by the hand of circumstance, he was led by the whisperings of interested advisers² to entertain suspicion against Humāyūn, and imagined that perhaps it was he who had administered³ poison to him. Ill as he was he returned to Lāhor, and in breach⁴ of his former agreement that he would leave the whole of his army at Āgra in the service of the king, took the whole of it⁵ with him, with the exception of two thousand men whom he left under the command of Sikandar. Mirzā Ḥaidar the Mughul and Dughlāt⁶ Kashmirī also remained at Āgra, and were kindly treated. Shīr Khān waxed bold at the success of these hypocrisies, and towards the close of the year⁷ aforesaid reached the bank of the Ganges, and despatching a⁸ force under his son Quṭb Khān, sent him across [the Ganges]⁹ against Kalpī and Itāwa. Qāsim Ḥusain Sultān Usbeg, in concert with Yādgār Nāṣir Mirzā and Iskandar Sultān, after a fight in the vicinity of Kālpī, put to death the son of Shīr Khān with a large number¹⁰ of his following, sending their heads to Āgra.

Humāyūn started to oppose Shīr Khān with a large force composed of some hundred thousand cavalry, and crossing the river of Qanauj encamped in face of his enemy for the space of one month. The army of Shīr Khān did not comprise in all more than five thousand¹¹ cavalry. It was under such circumstances that Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā and his son fled a second time from the king, and the reinforcements of Mirzā Kāmran also took flight to Lāhor, and the Mughuls of the King's army were scattered in all directions. The rains now came on, and inasmuch as the camp of Humāyūn's army was on low lying ground, he desired to march from there and encamp on the high ground. At this very time¹ Shīr Khān drew up his troops, and came out to give battle. This engagement took place on the day of the 'Āshūra, the 10th of Muḥarram 947 H., and a chronogram was found for it in the words Kharābī-i-mulk-i-Dillī.² The greater number of the Mughul soldiers refused to fight³ and took to their heels, while a small

 355. body of them who engaged in fight, strove manfully in battle,⁴ but things had gone beyond control, and it was of no avail. The king rode off with the intention of going to the high ground. This action of his in itself afforded an excuse to his men to flee, and a serious defeat ensued. Moreover the king while crossing the river Ganges became separated from his horse, and by the help of Shamsu-d-Dīn Muḥammad of Ghaznī (who eventually became the foster-father of the prince's most excellent majesty, and was honoured in Hindūstān with the title of A'zam Khān),⁵ escaped from the water and returned to Āgra; but seeing that⁶ the enemy's army was coming up in pursuit, he could not remain there,⁷ so made his way to the Panjāb with all speed.

At the commencement of Rabi' u-l-awwal of this year all the Sultāns and Amīrs of the Chaghatai tribe⁸ assembled for conference in Lāhor. Hypocrisy was still the order of the day, and Muḥammad Sultān and his sons fled from Lāhor to Multān, while Mīrzā Hindāl and Mīrzā Yādgār Nāṣir thought it advisable to proceed to Bhakkar and Tatta. prayed that this conference might speedily be dissolved so that he might go to Kābul. After long consultation Humāyūn sent Mirzā Ḥaidar with a large party who had accepted service in Kashmīr, to that district. It was agreed¹ that Khwāja Kalān Bēg should follow Mirzā Ḥaidar, and that Humāyūn himself also should proceed thither after the conquest of Kashmīr.

When Mirzā Ḥaidar arrived at Naushahra² which is a well-known place, he entered that country with the concurrence of certain Kashmīris and conquered it: and on the 22nd of Rajab of this same year he gained possession of that country. Khwāja Kalān Bēg had gone to Siālkoṭ. After his death (his son) Ḥasan became a servant of Jamāl Khān, one of the Amīrs of Sultān Sikandar, and was granted the jāegīr of the pargana of Sahsarām and Khawāspūr, dependencies of the fortress of Eastern Rohtās.⁶ He had five hundred cavalry under his command. After some time he was reconciled to his father, and was entrusted by him with the management of his jāegīrs. This he carried out with equity and impartiality, using clever devices³ for the punishment of rebels, and kept them in check.⁴ Later on circumstances again led to an estrangement between Farīd and his father, and going to Āgra with his own brother,⁵ he elected to enter the service of Daulat Khān,⁶ one of the chief commanders⁷ of Sultān Ibrāhīm, and laid a complaint against his father and brothers⁸ before the Sultān.⁹ The Sultān however, was displeased at this and said, This is a disgraceful and inhuman state of things that a father should be displeased with his son and that the son should complain against him.¹⁰ Upon the death of Ḥasan, Daulat Khān made a representation to the Sultān, and obtained his desire in securing those parganas for Shīr Khān. Sultān Muḥammad. This was at the time when Sultān Ibrāhīm had taken the field at Pānīpath, and Bābar Pādshāh had conquered Hindūstān and planted¹ the banner of sovereignty. Here he was well received, and as one day, when on a hunting expedition, he killed a tiger in the presence of Sultān Muḥammad, the title of Shir Khān was bestowed upon him by the Sultān, who also appointed him to be tutor² to his son Jalāl Khān. After some time Muḥammad Khān Sūr, governor of the country of Chaund, made an attempt to turn Sultān Muḥammad against Shir Khān, with the object of advancing the interest of his brothers, and having succeeded in getting an order from Sultān Muḥammad that the brothers were to have a share in the management of the parganas, sent Suleimān, son of Ḥasan Sūr who has been mentioned, accompanied by one of his servants named Shādī to Khawāspūr, and Bhaka the servant of Shir Khān who was known as the father of Khawāsh Khān engaged in battle with Suleimān and was killed. The remainder fled, and came to Shir Khān at Sahsarām. Shir Khān had no longer the power to cope with Muḥammad Khān, nor the inclination to serve Sultān Muḥammad, he accordingly abandoned his position and jāegīr, and having no other resource betook himself to Sultān Junaid Birlās, who was holding the Government of Karra and Mānikpūr on behalf of Bābar Padshāh.

359. He remained in his service, and after presenting many valuable offerings, obtained a fully equipped army as reinforcement from Sultān Junaid, and fought with Muḥammad Khān, wrested from him the parganas of Chaund and other parganas, and took possession of them. Muḥammad Khān fled, and took refuge in the fortress of Rohtās. Shir Khān, having wreaked his vengeance on his brothers, made apologetic overtures to Muḥammad Khān, addressing him by the title of uncle; having thus earned his gratitude he handed over³ the parganas he held as jāegīr to him on the same footing as formerly, and leaving Nizām his full brother in charge of the jāegīr, went again to Sultān Junaid, whom he found just starting to pay his respects to Bābar Padshāh. Taking Shīr Khān with him, Junaid enrolled him among the servants and well-wishers of the king's court. He accompanied Bābar on the expedition to Chanderī. In accordance with Mughūl habits and customs, and owing to the carelessness of the king in his management of the affairs of State, and the venality of the revenue-officers, and the utter disorder into which the affairs of the people had fallen, matters came to such a pass that if any person¹ had an object in view, he could quickly bring it to pass.² One day Bābar on the occasion of a banquet, observed him behave in a way which deserved the royal censure,³ and demanded the punishment of Shīr Khān. Those who were present at the banquet related the particulars of his independence and arrogant assumption, not omitting to mention some of his double-dealings. Shīr Khān accordingly became apprehensive of danger, and fled from the king's camp to his parganas, whence he wrote a letter couched in apologetic terms and sent it to Sultān Junaid, advancing as a pretext to cover his return,⁴ that since Muḥammad Khān was led by feelings of hostility against him to induce Sultān Muḥammad to send⁵ an army against Shīr Khān's parganas because of his being in service with the Mughūls, and as he could not easily and quickly⁶ obtain leave of absence from Bābar, he had accordingly taken this liberty and had at all hazards determined to rejoin those who wished well to the Sultān. Thence he proceeded to Sultān Muḥammad, where he was honoured by increased confidence and by suitable rewards, and was once more installed as custodian of his younger son Jalāl Khān, whose whole affairs he took under his own management. After the death of Sultān Muḥammad, he obtained absolute control of the whole country of Bihār and its dependencies.

of Bangāla, who despatched an Amīr named Qutb Khān to undertake the overthrow of Makhdūm 'Ālam. Shīr Khān marched to the aid of Makhdūm 'Ālam, and ¹ after a fierce battle put Qutb Khān to death, taking as spoil elephants and treasure and many followers. Jalāl Khān and his tribe, who are Lūhānīs,² in spite of Shīr Khān, made over Bihār to the ruler of Bangāla and elected to serve under him, and leaving Shīr Khān to his fate, took care to secure their own safety.

The Bangālīs in the first instance sent Ibrāhīm Khān, the son of the Qutb Khān above mentioned, against Shīr Khān to wreak vengeance upon him. Shīr Khān used daily to fight with them from within the fort, but since the Bangālīs received large reinforcements, and no way of retreat remained open to him, he yielded to necessity and fought a battle with them in the open ³ in which he gained the day. Ibrāhīm Khān also seeing what had occurred went and joined his father, and Shīr Khān seized the whole of the camp of the Bangālīs ⁴ with their elephants and artillery, acquiring thereby great renown, so that he established a lasting and undivided control over the country of Bihār and raised himself to the dignity of a Sultān. He next wrested the fortress of Chinār together with its vast treasures from the sons of [Jamāl Khān Sārang-Khānī ⁵]⁶ Tāj Khān, one of the Amīrs of 361. Sultān Ibrāhīm Lodī, who some years before had regained possession of it, and took in marriage his wealthy and beautiful wife who had vast stores of treasure. This fact also enhanced his grandeur and dignity, so that the desire for sovereignty daily gained more ascendancy over his mind, till at last certain powerful Amīrs of the Afghān Lodī faction summoned from Chitor Sultān Maḥmūd, son of Sultān Sikandar Lodī, who, after raising Ḥasan Khān Miwātī and Rānā Sānkā to royal power, had induced him to fight with Bābar Pādshāh, and subsequently to his defeat⁷ had remained in the fortress of Chitor, and seated him upon the throne in Patna.⁸ He accordingly came with a vast army and invaded the country of Bihār, and wresting it from Shīr Khān took possession of it. Sultān Maḥmūd passing by Sahsarām, after writing and making over to Shīr Khān an agreement relating to Bihār,¹ thereby raising his hopes, despatched him to attempt the conquest of Jaunpūr and to engage in war with the Amirs of Humāyūn Pādshāh. He thus brought the whole of that province as far as Lakhnau into his own² power. The Amirs of Humāyūn Pādshāh could not stand against (Shīr Khān), and proceeding to Kālinjar³ gave in their allegiance to him. Humāyūn marched to oppose Sultān Maḥmūd, and Baban and Bāyazīd,⁴ who were with him.⁵ When the two armies met Shīr Khān, who had stood aloof from Sultān Maḥmūd for some days, again joined his force, and sent a message to Mir Hindū Bēg Qūchīn, Commander-in-chief of the Mughūl army, saying that on the day of the battle he would make a flank movement and stand on one side. You and the Afghāns, said he, well know how utterly I abhor and detest the command of Sultān Maḥmūd and Baban⁶ and Bāyazīd. 362.

Verse.

If I committed a fault, I have at all events made my road clear.

Eventually he did as he had arranged, and Sultān Maḥmūd and Baban⁷ being defeated retired to the country of Patna, and made no further attempts to fight, till in the year 949 H. (1542 A. D.) in the country of Orissa⁸ he encamped on the frontiers of the desert of non-existence, and having gone to the appointed goal remained at rest. Humāyūn Pādshāh [after this victory]⁹ sent Mir Hindū Bēg as his agent to Shīr Khān with a demand to him to yield up the fort of Chinār. He, however, made some lame excuse, so the king ordered several noted Amirs to precede him and lay siege to that fortress, himself also ¹ preparing to follow them. In the meanwhile Shīr Khān wrote a petition in which he pointed out his own sincerity and the favour shewn him by Baban, and recounted the deserving nature of his former services, more specially his opposition to Baban and Bāyazīd. This petition he sent by the hand of Qutb Khān, his eldest son, together with a large force, to Humāyūn Pādshāh. He sent also with Qutb Khān, 'Īsā Khān Hajjāb, who was his vakīl with the powers of a vazīr, and he fleeing from Gujrāt joined his father in Bangāla. When Humāyūn Pādshāh altered his course towards Gujrāt, Shīr Khān himself had risen to great dignity and power, so that he engaged in open battle with Humāyūn on two occasions, and gained the day, as has already been mentioned. Shīr Shāh in the early part of the year of his accession laid waste the ancient city of Qannauj, and moving it from its original site re-established it on the banks of the river Ganges; it is now known as Shīrgarh. In the same manner he destroyed the fortress of Shamsābād and removed it to another place, calling it by the name of Rusūlpūr. Now, however, at the date of writing, it has been repopulated in its old position. And when he arrived at old Dihlī, which was founded by Sultān 'Alāud-Dīn, he destroyed that also, and established between the fortress of Dīnpanāh, which Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh constructed, and ² Fīrozābād, an extensive city, and built round ³ that fort a rampart of stone and mortar, having an extent of three krohs. On his arrival at Sultānpūr by continuous marches, the brothers of Humāyūn Pādshāh and the Chaghatai Amīrs quarrelled, and each took his own way as has been described, and Shīr Shāh himself, ⁴ not giving them time to reassemble, came up in pursuit. In this year he issued a public proclamation that from the country of Bangāla as far as western Rohtās, which is a four months' journey, and also from Āgra to Mandū, ⁵ at every kroh a sarāī (rest-house) and a mosque, and a well built of burned bricks was to be established and a Muazzin ⁶ and an Imām.⁷ A Musulmān and a Hindū were also appointed to superintend the supply of water for each. A refreshment house was also kept stocked for the use of strangers and poor wayfarers. On both sides of the road also, large and lofty trees were planted in avenues, so that all travellers might go along in the shade of them. Traces of these still remain in most places up to the present time, though fifty-two years have passed since then. In his reign justice was so widespread that if, for example, an old man holding a golden tray in his hand had lain down to sleep whenever he felt inclined, no thief or ruffian would have dared to take it away from him.

After that Shīr Shāh reached the hill-country of Bālnāt. He built there the fortress of Rohtās as a protection for the army of Hindūstān against the Mughūl forces. Then he appointed Khawāṣṣ Khān to undertake the pursuit, and returned. While on the march he heard that a commander named Khizr Khān Sarak had become infatuated with rebellious notions and was behaving as though he were a Sultān. Shīr Shāh² accordingly bent his course thither, and Khizr Khān hastening to encounter him was taken prisoner. Shīr Shāh took possession of that country and conferred it by way of jāegīr upon several of his Amirs, and appointed to the superintendence of the fort of Rohtās,³ Qāzī Faḡilat the Qāzī of the army, who was popularly known by the more appropriate title of Qāzī Faḡihat.⁴

In the year 948 H. he came⁵ to Āgra, and in the year 949 H. proceeded to Gwāliār with the intention of conquering Mālwa.⁶ Abūl Qāsim Beg, one of the Amirs of Humāyūn Pādshāh who had entrenched himself in that fortress, came in and had an interview

Mallū Khān the governor of Mālwa, who ¹ was one of the slaves of the Khiljī Sultāns, and held absolute and unlimited power in that province, offered his services to Shīr Shāh, and was honoured by splendid rewards. Shīr Shāh also had tents pitched for him close to his own tent, and prepared a hundred and one horses and other apparatus of pomp and dignity in his honour. In the meantime a suspicion arose in Mallū Khān's mind, and one night he tore his tent and escaped alone after the accustomed manner of slaves, and fled. Shīr Khān wrote the following:—

Verse.

You see how the chicken-hearted slave Mallū has treated me
It is a saying of Muṣṭafā "There can be no good in a slave."

Shīr Khān then nominated Hājī Khān Sultānī to the subjugation of the province of Mālwa, and Sazāwal Khān ² to administer the affairs of the district of Sawās; ³ Mallū Khān fought with Hājī Khān and Sazāwal Khān, and suffered a defeat from which he never recovered.

the leader of the Rāis of Hindūstān who held sway over the country of Nāgor and Jaunpūr, and was a powerful opponent of the Muslims; and inasmuch as one of the maxims of Shīr Shāh, from which he never departed,¹ was to throw up an entrenched position round his army, no matter how few the enemy might be, as soon as Māldeo arrived in the vicinity of Ājmīr with fifty thousand picked cavalry trained and experienced in war, intent upon slaying or being slain, and confronted Shīr Shāh, he, finding it impossible to make trenches and ramparts because of the sandy soil, held a conference with his experienced and veteran Amīrs. No one of them however could devise a way to effect that object. Suddenly Maḥmūd Khān, the son of 'Ādil Khān,² who was grandson to Shīr Shāh, notwithstanding his youth said, "Let Shāh 'Ālam order the banjāras (grain sellers) of the army to fill sacks with sand and arrange them round³ the army." This idea⁴ highly commended itself to Shīr Shāh, and he immediately placed his turban upon the lad's head, and bestowed upon him in perpetuity the treaty territories.

his army in calamity with the ignorant, boar natured, currish¹ Hindūs. Accordingly he devised an artifice, and wrote fictitious letters purporting to emanate from the generals of Māldeo's army, to himself, couched in enigmatical language,² the substance of them being that there would be no need for the king in person to superintend the fighting, when the armies were drawn up for battle, because they themselves would take Māldeo alive and deliver him up, upon the condition that such and such places should be given them as a reward. Having done this he so arranged that those letters fell into Māldeo's hands, with the result that Māldeo became utterly suspicious of all his generals,³ and, in the dead of night⁴ fled alone without looking behind him; and, notwithstanding that his generals denied their complicity with oath upon oath, saying that they never could have been guilty of such dastardly conduct,⁵ and that this was all the handiwork of Shīr Shāh in his desire to raise dissensions⁶ between them, it was of no use, and had no effect upon Māldeo's mind. Kanhaiyā,⁷ who was his minister and agent, abused Māldeo in violent terms, and taking four thousand resolute men devoted to death, or even more than this number, came down upon the army of Shīr Shāh, with the intention of surprising them by night, but missed his way, and after marching the whole night, when morning broke became aware that he had left the camp far in rear.⁸ After striving to the utmost of their powers, when they had abandoned all hope of life, at the very moment when the army of Shīr Shāh came in sight, as a result of their own stupidity, by the good luck of Shīr Shāh or by the superior good fortune of Islām, the infidels in a body dismounted from their horses, and renewing their vows of singleness of purpose and

And in the year 952 H. (1545 A.D.) Shīr Shāh invested the fortress of Kālinjar, which is one of the strongest and most famous of the forts of Hindūstān, and with great energy and skill in a short time prepared galleries, and used to make daily attacks upon the bastions;¹ and by the time that the galleries had advanced near to the walls of the fort, and the mines were ready, attacking on all four sides he made the condition of the garrison very precarious. Shīr Shāh from the position where he was standing, gave orders to hurl grenades filled with gunpowder into the fort. This they did, and by chance one of those grenades struck the wall of the fort, and recoiling with great force exploded. Its fragments fell among the other grenades, which exploded, burning Shīr Shāh severely from head to foot. And inasmuch as he was badly scorched,² and Shaikh Khalīl the son of his spiritual guide, and the learned Maulānā Nāzimu-d-Dīn³ also were fellow-sufferers with Shīr Shāh in this explosion,⁴ Shīr Shāh as he ran using his hands to cover his nakedness,⁵ took refuge in a tent which they had pitched for him in (front of) a bastion,⁶ where he lay unconscious. Whenever he recovered consciousness a little⁷ he shouted to his men encouraging them⁸ to seize the fort, and if any one came to see him he signed to him to go and fight, so that in his absence the Amīrs⁹ in command in the trenches worked harder than if he had been present, and behaved with the utmost gallantry, and coming to close quarters with the garrison, brought matters to a fight with knife and dagger and did full justice to the demands of endeavour and manliness. The writer heard a story from a most trustworthy source, that on that eventful day of assault, in which the deeds of every individual assailant were conspicuous, and the standards and faces could be easily distinguished one from another,¹ I saw, said he, a soldier armed cap-a-pie, who had not previously been seen nor was ever after seen, clothed from head to foot in black, wearing a plume² of the same colour upon his head,³ and urging and encouraging our men in the battle. Then he entered one of the galleries and made his way into the fort. I searched for him everywhere after the battle, but in vain, I could find no trace of him.⁴ The men in the other trenches also gave the same account, saying, we saw several horsemen wearing these clothes who kept advancing in front of us till they entered the fort and vanished:

A report became current that, in that battle, certain men from the invisible world had come to the aid of the Muslims. And Shir Shāh suffering and distressed as he was, from time to time enquired for tidings of victory. The air was terribly hot, and although they sprinkled him constantly with sandal and rose-water, it was utterly useless⁶ to relieve the scorching heat whose intensity increased hour by hour.

The lion and the goat drank at the same source
Left the world; the wise sage pronounced
The date of his death. *Zi ātash murd*³ (he died from the effects of fire).

His corpse was taken to Sahsarām where was the burial-place of his fathers, and there buried. The period of his military command was fifteen years, and of his Sultānate five years.

It is said that on one occasion when he was looking in a mirror, he exclaimed, "Alas! that I obtained my kingdom at the time of evening prayer."⁴

This latter is the wood of Pterocarpus santalinus (Red sanders). It is generally called Debi Chandan, it is used, not for headache, but after being offered at the shrine of Kālī is used to mark the forehead of the worshipper. 375. Shāh, and the son of Mulla Ahmad Junaid,¹ who is well known,² found this verse of the sacred word:³ "And already we have written in the Psalms, after the admonition that 'the earth shall my righteous servants inherit,'"⁴ to give the date of his accession. He wrote a despatch to his elder brother 'Ādil Khān and sent it to him in Ranthanbūr, of which the following is the substance. "Although the succession was really your right, still as you were at so great a distance there was a danger, nay a certainty of the occurrence of disturbances here before you could arrive. Accordingly with a view to keep down insurrections, I will take charge of the army for a few days as your deputy, and after you arrive I shall have no alternative but to submit to and obey you." Leaving Kālinjar he made for⁵ Āgra and in the vicinity of the township of Kūra Khātampūr,⁶ Khawāṣṣ Khān arrived from Sihhind which was his jāegīr, and yielded a forced allegiance, because he was more inclined to favour the accession of 'Ādil Khān as compared with Islem Shāh; a splendid banquet was held and he was anew placed on the throne. Afterwards when fresh despatches from Islem Shāh reached 'Ādil Khān, he referred the question of his coming to the following four persons upon whose advice and opinion as to its expediency he made his action dependent: Qutb Khān Nāib, 'Īsā Khān Niyāzī, Khawāṣṣ Khān, and Jalāl Khān Jilwānī,⁷ all of whom were great Amirs, men of eminence belonging to his family. Islem Shāh sent this body of men to him bearing an agreement by which he undertook to allow 'Ādil Khān to depart to his jāegīr after the first interview, and to deliver to his control any place in Hindūstān which he might select. 'Ādil Khān acting upon the advice of these Amirs proceeded from the neighbourhood of Ranthanbūr to Fathpūr, otherwise called Sīkri, and Islem Shāh¹ left Āgra and came to Shikārpūr,² where the royal palace is at present, to receive him; and when they met they first fulfilled the duties of condolence, and evinced great cordiality, and after a short time set out together for Āgra. Islem Shāh had plotted treachery against 'Ādil Khān, and had consequently made a stipulation that not more than two or three persons should be left in the fort with 'Ādil Khān. This however was not carried out, and a large body of followers accompanied him; accordingly Islem Shāh was constrained, in order to avoid suspicion, to treat 'Ādil Khān with extraordinary³ fawning and flattery, saying "I have taken care of these unruly⁴ Afghans so far by artful means,⁵ now I make them over to you."

Verse.

Subject the intoxicated and riotous one to the warning glance

Having placed him upon the throne he himself assumed an attitude of submission and obedience, and from motives of worldly wisdom was most punctilious in the observance of courtesy.⁷ Although 'Ādil Khān was in the flower of his youth, and of great bodily strength (many well-known tales of his strength are told), nevertheless, since he was fond of ease, and was well aware of the craft and subtlety of Islem Shāh and his⁸ ways of dealing, would not agree to that procedure, rose to his feet, and seating Islem Shāh on the throne again with all honour and ceremony,⁹ swore allegiance to him, and offered him congratulations upon his accession, with the customary offerings¹⁰ and oblations. Islem Shāh, in accordance with the compact which had been made,¹¹ sent 'Īsa Khān and Khawāss Khān to accompany 'Ādil Khān, and having confirmed Baiāna to him as a jāegīr, permitted him to proceed thither. Two months later he appointed Ghāzi Mahallī, who was one of his confidential attendants, to go and arrest 'Ādil Khān.

Qutb Khān and 'Isā Khān also, who were two of the chief nobles of the State,² with whose concurrence the compact³ had been made, were annoyed at this breach of faith on the part of Islem Shāh,⁴ and with great management summoned 'Adil Khān at a time agreed upon, namely at day break after the Shab-i-barāt,⁵ so that they might own allegiance to him. It so chanced that 'Adil Khān and Khawāṣṣ Khān, having arrived at Sikrī on the Shab-i-barāt,⁶ spent that night as a vigil in the service of Shaikh Salīm Chishtī, in voluntary prayers⁷ and benedictions, so that their departure for Āgra was delayed long past the time agreed upon, and it was breakfast time⁸ when they reached the outskirts of Āgra. 'Īsā Khān Hajjāb warned him of the folly and absurdity of this project, and prevented him from sending his Amīrs to his enemy and from starting for Chunār. Eventually Islem Shāh, accompanied by a party of his own bodyguard, and two or three thousand old and trusty retainers, left Āgra with all haste and came out in force to fight, first recalling those Amīrs¹ whom he had sent,² saying "I am by no means confident that 'Ādil Khān will not deal treacherously with you; you had better return quickly and rejoin me, because the question between³ him and me can only be settled by the sword."

The Amīrs, however, who were friendly to 'Ādil Khān, on seeing Islem Shāh take the field, refused⁵ to return to his side and entered the ranks of the more powerful army; a severe battle ensued before Āgra, and 'Ādil Khān was defeated⁶ and fled alone toward Bhatta.⁷ Khawāṣṣ Khān and 'Īsā Khān Niyāzī, who had a strong regard and unbounded loyalty for each other, took the road to Miwāt and the township of Firūzpūr, engaged the force which had been sent in pursuit of them, and overcame it; but eventually, not having power to resist the army of Islem Shāh, proceeded to the hills to the north of Hindūstān, which⁸ are called (the) Kumāon (hills), and took refuge with the Rājās of that district. Qutb Khān Nāib, having been appointed to attack them, kept continually ravaging the country at the foot of the hills. Qutb Khān also took fright, and fled from the foot of the Kumāon hills to Lahore, taking refuge with Haibat Khān, to whom Shīr Shāh had given the title of A'zam Humāyūn. Haibat Khān in obedience to a summons from² Islem Shāh, sent Qutb Khān in chains to him. Islem Shāh sent him together with Shālibāz Khān Lūhānī,³ who was brother-in-law to Shīr Shāh,⁴ and Barmazid Kor who was the *Dajjāl*⁵ of that sect, and the Hajjāj⁶ of his age, and thirteen or fourteen other Amīrs⁷ and Amīrs' sons, to the fortress of Gwāliār, where most of them quitted the body in imprisonment.⁸

He mentioned the names of some whom he recognized. Previously to this he had thrown⁴ the abovementioned Amīrs, men of ability, into a chamber in Gwāliār, and setting fire to it with gunpowder had burned them all except Kawāl Khān Ghakkar, who remained under the protection of the Ail-cherisher safe in a corner of the room.⁵ [It is said that the following was the reason of his escaping; the sister of Kawāl Khān, who had been united by marriage to Islem Shāh, became aware of the conference and sent word to her brother, saying: This very night they intend to blow up the prisoners with gunpowder. She also sent from inside (the palace) four quilts stuffed with cotton, and several skins of water. Kawāl Khān poured quantities of water upon the quilts, and under pretence of taking a bath betook himself into a corner, apart from his friends, and rolling himself up in the quilts had gone to sleep when they set fire to the room, and all were burned to ashes, but he alone remained alive beneath the quilt. In the morning Islem Shāh came to inspect that prison house, and seeing Kawāl Khān alive said: It is right for me to release you seeing that fire had no power over you].⁶ Then Islem Shāh having made him⁷ take an oath that he would never again oppose him, released him, and appointed him to assist the Governor of the Panjāb to conquer the country of the Ghak-kars [where he arrived with all honour].⁸ In short Sa'id Khān, who had been a witness of this sudden death, gave orders in obedience to which post horses were tied up along the road to Lāhor, so that he travelled the distance between Āgra and Lāhor within three nights. Day by day the scale turned more and more in favour of the Niyāzī faction, and Ā'zam Humāyūn read the Khutbah in his own name in Lāhor. Islem Shāh returned from that same camp and came to Āgra, and summoning a vast army from all sides marched for the Panjāb. Sazāwal Khān came from Mālwa to join this movement, and was received very graciously, and after bringing forward certain important matters took leave, while Islem Shāh, after halting for a few days in Dihlī and ordering his army, set out for Lāhor.¹ Ā'zam Humāyūn and Khawāṣṣ Khān, and 'Īsā Khān² Niyāzī as well, (who had come down from the hill country to join him), came from the Panjāb with armies strong as the hills to receive Islem Shāh. In the early part of the³ winter time a fierce battle was fought in front of⁴ the township of Ambāla, and on the evening preceding the day on which the battle was to be fought, Ā'zam Khān had asked Khawāṣṣ Khān: After the victory who will be selected as the successor to the throne? And Sa'id Khān, the elder brother of Ā'zam Humāyūn, attended by a body of men fully armed and equipped, disguised in such a way that no one would know him, came in under the pretext of offering congratulations, with the intention of putting an end to Islem Shāh, and with that object asked repeatedly, where is the Pādshāh that I may offer him my congratulations on his victory. An elephant driver of one of those elephants which had surrounded Islem Shāh recognised the voice of Sa'id Khān, and struck a blow at him with his spear, but he³ made his way in safety through the crowd of elephants, great as it was,⁴ and foiled in his purpose made his escape; the Niyāzī faction fled and came to Dhankot,⁵ which is near Roh,⁶ and the remainder were plundered by the Kawārs, while some were drowned in the nullahs of Ambāla. Islem Shāh pursued as far as Western Rohtās, and despatched Khawāja Wais⁷ Sirwānī with a large army to oppose the Niyāzīs, and returned towards Āgra. Leaving Āgra he went⁸ to Gwāliār, and made it his capital.⁹ When Khawāss Khān and 'Īsā Khān Niyāzī, who had made common cause, left the battle field, 'Īsā Khān went to the hill country,¹⁰ [while Khawāss Khān with five or six hundred cavalry¹¹ fled to Lāhor]; [and (Islām Khān)¹² Islem Shāh appointed Shams Khān

The inhabitants of Lāhor shutting themselves up in the fort held the city till the arrival of Shams Khān, and Khawāṣṣ Khān, having cut down the lofty trees⁵ of Safidār and Chinār⁶ of that grove, had set about making *Sōtūr*⁷ and ladders, when⁸ his cavalry brought news that Rāi Husain Jilwānī and other Amīrs of Salīm Shāh's party with an army of thirty thousand cavalry had arrived in the neighbourhood of Lāhor. Khawāṣṣ Khān, after a conference with 'Isā Khān, abandoned the siege, and went out some five or six krohs to meet (his enemy), and with five hundred veteran cavalry well tried in war hurled himself against that wall of steel. Rāi Husain said to his men, leave the way open so⁹ that this black calamity may pass through our midst. Accordingly¹⁰ he made a breach in the line of Salīm Shāh's army, and attacked them again from the rear and threw them into confusion. At this juncture he received a wound in the knee which bore him from his horse to the ground, but his opponents had not sufficient enterprise to come up to him and take him prisoner, and he was openly borne off the field upon a charpoy.¹¹

And in the year 954 H. (1547 A.D.) an Afghān named Usmān, whose hand Sazāwal Khān had cut off for some reason, one day laid an ambush in Āgra, and at the entrance to a road aimed a blow at Sazāwal Khān and wounded him. Sazāwal Khān went to the camp, and represented that this attack had been made at the instance of Salīm Shāh, he then took his way to Mālwa. Islem Shāh pursued him as far as Bānswāla, but seeing that Sazāwal Khān was hidden among the Zamindārs of Sarūr,³ Salīm Shāh left 'Isa Khān Sūr with twenty thousand cavalry in Ujjain, and reached the capital. In the early part of his reign Islem Shāh detailed five thousand cavalry for the chief sarkārs of Hindūstān. Among them Mubārīz Khān, the son of Nizām Khān ⁴ Sūr, who was the cousin and wife's brother of Islem Shāh, and eventually received the title of Muḥammad 'Adilī, was appointed as a commander of twenty thousand to the vicinity of Ajāwan in the Sarkār of Sanbal, in order that Khawāṣṣ Khān and the other Amīrs might not be able to raise disturbances in that province, and he appointed as his deputy Pābandh Khazak.⁵ He had also given orders at the beginning of his reign, that between every two resthouses built by Shir Shāh, which were at intervals of one kroh, another rest-house of the same pattern should be built, with a temple, and a dwelling-place, and a conduit for water, and that a buttery and kitchen containing food both cooked and uncooked, for the use of travellers,⁶ both Hindū and Musulmān, should be

Among other commands of his was this, that the *madad-i-ma'ash*¹ and aimah grants of the whole of the protected² provinces of Hindūstān which Shīr Shāh had given, and the rest-houses which he had furnished, and the pleasure-gardens he had laid out,³ should remain just as they were, and should not be altered in the slightest degree. Another order was, that all the *Pātars*⁴ should be taken by force from those Amīrs who kept Akhāras (these are well known in Hindūstān). He also seized⁵ the elephants in the same manner, and did not leave in the possession of any one any but a wretched female elephant fit only for carrying baggage, and gave⁶ orders that the red tent was confined solely to his own use. Another order was this, that he brought the whole country under his own personal control,⁷ and in accordance with the regulations and custom of the dāghī system⁸ which Shīr Shāh had instituted, the soldiery were paid in cash. A further step was to send written orders to all the Sarkārs containing comprehensive instructions on all important points of religion, and all political and civil questions,⁹ entering into the minutest essential detail,¹⁰ and dealing with all regulations which might be of service to the soldiery and civil population, to the merchants and other various classes, and which the authorities were bound to follow in their jurisdiction.

Also the Amirs of five thousand, ten thousand, and twenty thousand, used every Friday to pitch a lofty tent supported by eight poles,¹ and bring the shoes of Salim Shāh together with a quiver which he had given to the *sardārs*² in front of the throne; and first of all the commander of the troops, and after him the Munşif, that is to say, the Chief Commissioner (Amīn) followed by the others in due precedence, with bowed heads and every expression of respect would take their seats in their appointed places. Then a Secretary would come and read aloud that order, chapter and verse, which occupied eighty sheets of paper more or less. Any question which presented any difficulty was referred by them in conclave to the various provisions and rulings of that document, by which it was finally decided, and if it should so happen that any Amir acted in contravention of that order, the Secretary used to write a report of that action and despatch it to the Court, and the disobedient Amir would forthwith be visited with punishment together with his family and relations. This procedure remained in force to the end of the reign of Islem Shāh. The writer of this Muntakhab, in the year 955 H. (1548 A.D.), when he was of tender age, went to the country of Bajwāra, one of the dependencies of Baiāna, with the army of Farid Tāran, Commander of five thousand, in the company of his maternal grandfather, on him be the mercy of God, and witnessed these customs and rules of practice. ¹ This is a conjecture. I have failed to find the word سرغه Surgha in any dictionary. It sounds like a Turkī word. Moreover he gave them drums which they used to play at their doors at the time of the naubat,³ and the prostitutes used to give themselves airs⁴ and used to say Sag-i-falakam.⁵ This class used to come every Thursday evening, in accordance with the custom of the harlots of Hindūstān, to pay their respects to Islem Shāh, and the heralds and chamberlains used to call out with a loud voice, O King cast a gracious glance hither, for a certain Khān Niyāzī, and Bahmān Khān are here to invoke blessings on thee. This used to annoy the Afghāns who were all of one tribe and of one mind, so that an intense disgust for him had sprung up in their hearts. Some assert that his conferring the titles of the Niyāzis and giving the ensigns and drums was on the first occasion.⁶ God knows the truth. And Ā'zam Humāyūn, who on the second occasion was defeated, was not able to gird himself again to war, and the Niyāzī party being scattered asunder grew daily weaker, and at first took refuge with the Ghakkars in the neighbourhood of Rohtās, making the hill country adjoining the Kashmīr territory their asylum. two years he kept the Afghāns¹ employed in carrying stone and lime, and had such a hatred of the whole tribe that he heaped² the dust of infamy and oppression on their heads. At this time he did not give them even the smallest coin³ by way of recompense. A party of them, however, who had obtained exemption from this labour,⁴ he detailed to oppose the Ghakkars, and they engaged in continuous warfare with them.

The Ghakkars in appearance like the tribe of 'Ād,⁵ daily fought with the Afghāns, and by night entered their camp like thieves, and used to carry off whomsoever they might find, woman or man, freed man or slave, and keep them in bonds with the utmost rigour, and sell them. The Afghāns⁶ dragged them in the dirt, and gave them the nickname of Ruswāi (disgraced), but no one had the power to represent this state of things to Islem Shāh till at last one day Shāh Muḥammad Farmalī,⁷ who was one of the most noted Amīrs for wit and good-humour in Hindūstān, and was also a specially favoured and forward boon companion said, "My Lord the King! Last night I saw in a dream three bags descend from heaven, in one of which was dust, in another gold, and in the third⁸ paper. The dust fell upon the head of a soldier, the gold went to the house of the Hindū daftari,⁹ and the paper remained in the royal treasury." Islem Shāh was pleased with this speech, and promised that after his return to Gwāliār he would make his accountants draw up an account of the soldiers' pay, and pay them in gold. As it happened that order was never carried out, for in those same days death seized him by the collar.

their strength¹ was broken, and they came into Kashmīr, the Kashmīris, who are² born traitors and deceivers, first of all invited the Niyāzīs from Rājūrī after inflaming them with spurious ambition for kingdom, and in the end their guides leading them astray³ brought the tribes of Kashmīr to oppose them, and at a hint from Islem Shāh held the head of the pass against them. The women even of the Niyāzīs in defence of their honour girded on quivers, (among them were the mother and wife of Ā'zam Humāyūn),⁴ and fighting with the Kashmīris were attacked by a hail of stones which literally covered them, and not a soul escaped. It is said that in the reign of Shīr Shāh a body of the Afghāns of the tribe of Sanbal invited the Niyāzīs to Dhankot under treaty, and put two thousand of them to death in obedience to the orders of Shīr Shāh, putting their wives and children to the sword. Five years later the same thing happened to them,⁵ and in this house of retribution they received the reward of their deeds, hand for hand. And⁶ in these narrow passes they put all three brothers to the sword, sending their heads as an offering to Salīm Shāh. They also sent for him a girl from there. A part of this story has been elegantly told in the Tārīkh-i-Kashmīr,⁷ the composition of which is ancient though its arrangement is modern; and at the time when Islem Shāh, had sent troops against the Ghakkars and the Jānoha party who were strongly entrenched on the banks of the river Behat, he himself was occupied in building the fortress of Māngarh;⁸ and Kāmran Mirzā, after fighting many battles with⁹ Muḥammad Humāyūn Padshāh, fled from Kābul and took refuge with Salīm Shāh, in the hopes that he would give him reinforcements which would enable him to capture Kābul, in the (vain) expectation that the water which had flowed away would return¹⁰ to its source. days, in virtue of his capacity for extorting taxes, had been promoted from being overseer of the market to a post of confidence, and sent him with another body of Afghāns to the neighbourhood of Rohtās to meet Mīrzā, and although Islem Shāh in his own mind thought this a reason for increased confidence in Mīrzā, being led to this by the want of confidence¹ he had in the Afghāns as a tribe, and the entire trust he reposed in Humūn, still Mīrzā himself made light of this, and² recognising that there were dregs in the very first draught of the cup was unwilling to come in person.

Verse.

Now indeed thou repentest but thy repentance profiteth thee nothing.

Nevertheless, in spite of this Mīrzā still believed that possibly Islem Shāh would overlook everything, and would treat him with honour and respect when the time of meeting arrived. However, on the day of public audience, he himself entered with arrogant assurance, and sitting on the seat of a Fara'ūn or a Shaddād,³ gave orders to Sarmast Khān⁴ the Afghān, a Dā'ūd Za'i,⁵ who held the office of Bārbak,⁶ in accordance with which he directed Mīrzā to perform the customary salutations like the servants of the ordinary public. He accordingly performed the Kornish,⁷ and those diabolical men⁸ out of sheer inhumanity seized Mīrzā roughly by the nape of the neck, and shouted aloud several times saying, Your Majesty!⁹ Be pleased to cast a glance hither, for Kāmran the Muqaddam-zāda of Kābul invokes blessings. for Mīrzā near to his own tent, and bestowed upon him a horse and a robe of honour, and a slave girl and a eunuch so that they might spy into his affairs. He used also to summon the Mīrzā from time to time, and hold converse with him regarding poetry, but their intercourse was always disagreeable, and the Mīrzā was worried by those incessant ceremonial visits and shew of politeness, till he grew sick of his life, and was watching a favourable opportunity to make his escape. Moreover the Afghāns used to make jibes ¹ at him in the Hindī tongue, and when he appeared in darbār used to say ² Moro mī āyad ³ (Here comes the peacock). The Mīrzā enquired from one of the attendants, in the presence of Islem Shāh, "What do they mean by Moro?" He answered, "It is the name they give ⁴ to a man of great dignity." The Mīrzā replied, ⁵ "At that rate Salīm Shāh is a first rate Moro and Shīr Shāh was a still finer." Salīm Shāh consequently gave orders that no one was ever to use that word again, ⁶ nor to indulge in pleasantries at the Mīrzā's expense. At last one day Islem Shāh called upon the Mīrzā for a verse of poetry, when the Mīrzā recited this maṭla' off hand:

Gardish-i-gardūn-i-gardān gardanānrā gard kard
*Bar sar-i-ṣāhib-tamīzān nāqīṣān rā mard kard.*⁷

The revolutions of the circling heaven have brought low the mighty.
And have made worthless men to lord it over men of intelligence.

Islem Shāh fully caught the meaning of this verse, and gave secret orders to his attendants to keep the Mīrzā under open arrest. The Mīrzā, however, by the help of the zamīndārs,⁸ made an arrangement with one of the hill Rājas, and persuaded him, by holding out inducements of various kinds, to station post-

Inasmuch as that village is near Sultānpūr the residence of Sultān Ādam Ghakkar, at a distance of three krohs from the fortress of Rohtās, some one went to Sultān Ādam and informed him that a Mughl woman was encamped at such and such a place, attended only by one jilaudār and that her intention was to proceed on the following morning. Sultān Ādam sent messengers to make enquiries, and then proceeded⁶ in person, and had an interview with the Mīrzā, who by persistent entreaty prevailed upon him to give a promise that he would send him in safety to a place of refuge. Sultān Ādam accordingly wrote a letter to Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh, who had recently arrived in that neighbourhood, begging him to spare the Mīrzā's life.⁷

you with this basket confident in its being as a royal umbrella to you,¹ rise, and place it on your head and be gone. Islem Shāh without hesitation lifted the basket accepted it as a lucky omen and took his departure.

How good it is to take a lucky omen,
Not to strike one's cheek (in grief) but to give mate with the rook.²

But eventually this matter became a source of annoyance to him³ as is generally the case. At all events, when Islem Shāh succeeded to the kingdom, during his reign two Saiyyids of good birth, men of ascetic habit, clean-living, dignified, and agreeable, one of whom was named Amīr Abū⁴ Tālib who was the inferior, and the other named Mīr Shamsu-d-Dīn who was his superior and brother's son to him, arrived from the country of 'Irāq at the camp of Islem Shāh in the Panjāb, and came to Dihlī, where they took up their abode in one of the quarters of the city, and were resorted to by all classes. Amīr Abū Tālib was so marvellously skilled in the abstruse science of medicine, that the majority of the sick who came under his treatment obtained cures, and used to bring him presents and offerings in return, to say nothing of perquisites.⁵ A report was spread that he was in possession of the ring of 'Alī,⁶ may God be satisfied with him, one of the properties of which was that no one who was suspected (of being of bastard origin) could stand in presence of that ring, and retain the power of seeing it. God knows the truth. Relying upon his former intimacy with Shāh Muḥammad, he desired to give his daughter in marriage to the nephew of Mīr Abū Tālib, but he was by no means inclined to agree to this proposal, and folk began to entertain increased suspicion against him, and both small and great talked openly about him. Shāh Muḥammad summoned these two holy men into his own private dwelling for safe custody, and took great pains to entertain them. One night, not long afterwards, an armed band entered his ¹ house by the upper story and martyred both father and son who were engaged in their night's devotions. They then left the house, and in the morning the governor of the city came and enquired of Shāh Muḥammad how this had occurred. He absolutely denied any knowledge of the circumstances, and stated that he had no idea who the murderers were; then he prepared a report of the affair under the Great Seal, and sent it together with a despatch to Islem Shāh at his camp. Islem Shāh thereupon sent to Dihlī Makhdūmu-l-Mulk Mullā 'Abdu-llāh of Sultānpūr,² who was Shaikh-u-l-Islām and Ṣadru-ṣ-ṣudūr, to investigate this matter, and also despatched circular letters summoning the Chief 'Ulamā of the time, for example Miyān Hātim Sanbalī, Miyān Jamāl Khān Muftī, and others. This conflict lasted two months after this time, and after great argument and enquiry it was with tolerable certainty conjectured³ that the murderers were agents of Shāh Muḥammad.⁴ This result was reported to Islem Shāh, but before any reply could be received Shāh Muḥammad, who had sunk from so high dignity to the depths of disgrace, could not endure the anxiety, underwent venesection and took sour milk in addition, and endured voluntarily humiliating penance. Report also says even more than this, but, every one knew perfectly well that all these austerities and self-inflictions, were the outcome of hypocrisy and deceit, and not inspired by religious motives.

This event took place in the year 956 H. Another important incident was the affair of Shaikh 'Alāi Maḥdī of Baiāna,¹ which closely resembles the affair of Sidi Maula,² which took place during the reign of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn Fīrōz Shāh, in fact the proverb, One shoe is like its fellow,³ is exactly applicable here.

The following is a brief exposition of this affair: The father of the aforesaid Shaikh 'Alāi was called Ḥasan, and was one of the great Shaikhs of the country of Bangāla, and on his arrival from Bangāla on the occasion of his pilgrimage to the holy city of Makka with his younger brother Shaikh Naṣru-llah, who was one of the most eminent of the 'Ulamā, came from there to Hindūstān and took up his abode in the province of Baiāna. The words Jā'a naṣru-llāhi wal fath,⁴ were found to give the date of that event. The elder brother gave his attention to *irshād*⁵ and hidāyat, and the younger⁶ to *fatwā*⁷ and instruction in religious knowledge.⁸

Shaikh 'Alāi, who was the most orthodox of the sons of the Shaikh, the tablet of whose forehead was from early boyhood distinguished by the marks of nobility and uprightness, and the evidences of a youth to be spent in the worship of God and in following the ordinances of the prophet of God, may the peace and blessing of God rest upon him, in the service of his venerable father devoted himself to the acquirement of exoteric and esoteric sciences, and to the improvement of his character, disposition, and behaviour, and in a short time⁹ having read all the routine works by the aid of his natural quickness of apprehension and clear intellect, engaged in tuition and instruction.

Verse.

Continual learning is requisite with application and exertion,
 Always by day argument and by night repetition.
 Piety, asceticism, worship and reverence,
 Without these, all acquisitions are wondrous vain.

After the death of his revered father, having abandoned the ordinary conversation and giving up all connection with the delusive phantoms of the world, he set himself to follow consistently the paths of obedience and austerity, firmly occupying the prayer carpet of the Shaikhs, and used to engage in the direction and instruction¹ of seekers of the right way. Nevertheless he still retained a residue of evidences of worldly desires, and in accordance with the saying, "The last thing to leave the head of the just is the love of glory,"² seeking as he did to claim superiority over his fellow-men, he was unwilling that any other Shaikh in that city should share his dignity; this he carried so far that on the day of the festivals, from his excessive jealousy³ and envy, he caused one of the leaders of the contemplative⁴ and ascetic⁵ Shaikhs of the Sūfī party to descend from his litter, thus inflicting a grievous blow to his dignity. He used to arrogate to himself alone the dignity of Shaikhdom. His other brothers, who in respect of years and experience were his superiors, used also to yield submission to him and pride themselves upon it.⁶

In the meanwhile Miyān 'Abdu-llah, a Niyāzī⁷ Afghān, who was at first one of the most noted lieutenants of Shaikh Salim Chishtī of Fathpūr, and who eventually with his permission proceeded on a pilgrimage to the sacred city of Makka, and performed various kind offices and favours for him, taking part with Mir Saiyyid Muḥammad of Jaunpūr,⁸ may God sanctify his holy resting-place, who had claimed to be the promised Mahdī, and adopting the manners of a Mahdī, on his return from the Ḥijāz took up his abode in Biānah, and making his dwelling in the corner of a grove far from the haunts of men on the borders of a tank, used to cast water upon his head; and when the times of prayer came round, used to gather together certain of the labourers, hewers of wood and drawers of water who had to pass by that way, and compel them to form an assembly for prayer,¹ with such a degree of enthusiasm, that if he met any man disinclined for the meeting he would give him a few coins² and encourage him, thus not allowing the reward of the assembly³ to escape him. 396.

When Shaikh 'Alāi saw his conduct he was greatly pleased,⁴ and said to his own followers, This is religion and true faith which Mīyān 'Abdu-llah Nīyāzī has, whereas the path in which we are held is nought but idolatry and infidelity.⁵

So long as a hair's breadth of existence remains to thee⁶

The danger of idol-worship still remains for thee.

Thou sayest I have broken my idols and my Zunnār, I am free,

This idol however, thy slavery to self-conceit, remains to thee.

Abandoning the customs of his forefathers, and giving up his claims as a Shaikh and a leader of religion, trampling under foot his self-esteem and conceit, he devoted himself to the care of the poor of his own neighbourhood, and with the utmost self-mortification and humility gave himself up to the service of those whom he had formerly⁷ vexed, and abandoning his *madad-i-māāsh*⁸ and his alms-house and monastery,⁹ entering the valley of self-renunciation and abnegation, bestowed¹⁰ all his worldly possessions

Then approaching Miyān 'Abdu-llah, with all respectful submission to him, he took instruction in the ceremonial observance of Zikr ⁴ in the manner which obtains among that sect.

The interpretations of the Qur'ān, and the delicate points and minutiae and true meanings of that sacred book were easily revealed to him, and a large number of the friends and companions who were in accord with him, and believed in him, some of them unmarried and some with families, chose companionship with him even at the risk of their lives, and following the path of his guidance with the foot of reliance in God, three hundred householders, abandoning all other source of gain and traffic, agriculture and skilled labour, spent their time with him. And whenever anything was given by Providence they used to divide it justly, apportioning to each individual an equal share. If nothing came,⁵ comforting themselves with the sacred word, "Men whom neither merchandise nor selling divert from the remembrance of God,"⁶ even had they died of hunger, they would not have uttered a sound, and if any person abandoning his vow made according to their mutual compact engaged in any lucrative occupation, of a surety he would expend a tithe of it in the service of Almighty God. Twice daily after the morning prayer and another prayer, great and small would gather in that assembly, and listen to an exposition of the Qur'ān. Shaikh 'Alāi had such a marvellous power of attraction that when he was expounding the Qur'ān almost every one who heard him, of his own accord withheld his hand from all worldly occupation, and elected to join that assembly,¹ abandoning his family and relations and children, enduring the hardships of poverty, hunger and religious warfare never troubled himself again about his work or gains; and if he had not that degree of fortitude, his penitence and repentance of his sins and iniquities would certainly have availed nothing, while many a one thought it his duty to empty his cooking vessels at nightfall of all the necessities of life even to salt and flour and water, and let them remain upside down, and they kept nothing in the way of means of existence by them, from their extreme faith in the providence of Almighty God, and the saying "Each new day brings a new provision" was the basis of their practice. 398.

A short account of this sect is given in the *Najātu-r-rashīd*² which should be consulted.³

In spite of this they were in the habit of keeping arms and implements of war always with them⁴ as a protection against their enemies, so that anyone who was unacquainted with the truth of the matter would be apt to think they were wealthy; *The ignorant think them to be rich because of their modesty.*⁵ And whenever they saw any irreligious or forbidden action either in the city or the market, they went and called the offenders to account by main force,⁶ and admitted no investigation by the governor, and on most occasions they got the best of it; they aided every magistrate of the city who acted in conformity with their religious tenets and principles⁷ in carrying out his

Mīyān ‘Abdu-llah when he saw that Shaikh ‘Alā’i had lost his influence with rich and poor alike, and that his day was over, was much vexed, and speaking with gentleness and moderation, said by way of advice, The time cannot away with affairs of this kind, and truth nowadays has become more bitter than colocynth. It were wiser for you to quit this vale (of iniquity) and either retire into obscurity or determine upon a journey to the Hijāz.

Shaikh ‘Alā’i,² retaining that selfsame habit and conduct³ which he always had, accompanied by six or seven hundred families, set out for Gujrāt in the hope that in the companionship of the chiefs⁴ and leaders of this sect he might learn the customs of the inmates of cloisters.⁵ At the time of his arrival at the township of Basāwar from Baiāna, my late father took me, the writer of these pages, to do homage to him. In consequence of my tender years, his form remained fixed in my memory as a dream or a vision. On his arrival at Khawāspūr which is near Jodhpūr, Khawāss Khān who had been appointed to that district, at first came out to receive him and joined the circle of his adherents: but in consequence of his devotion to musical entertainments and pastimes,⁶ whereas now every Thursday night Sūfis used to assemble in his house, and Shaikh ‘Alā’i forbade music and other prohibited⁷ pastimes, and enjoined⁸ that which is a well known proverb. Shaikh 'Alā'i in consequence of certain opposition which arose, turned back in the middle of the journey and returned to Baiāna, and at the time when Islem Shāh had taken firm possession of the throne of power in Āgra, and the rumours regarding Shaikh 'Alā'i reached his ears, he sent for Mir Saiyyid Rafī'u-d-Dīn the traditionist, and Miyān² Abul-fath of Thanesar and other learned doctors of Āgra, and summoned Shaikh 'Alā'i from Baiāna, at the instigation of Makhdūmu-l-mulk Maulāna 'Abdu-llah of Sultānpūr. He accordingly, accompanied by a party of select³ companions, all of whom wore mail and were fully armed, came to the Court, and paying no heed to the customary observances of kingly assemblies,⁴ greeted the whole assemblage in the manner appointed by the laws of Islām.⁵ Islem Shāh acknowledged his salutation with indignation, as the appearance of the Shaikh greatly displeased⁶ him and his courtiers.

Makhdūmu-l-Mulk had fully persuaded Islem Shāh that Shaikh 'Alā'i was a revolutionary who laid claim to being the Mahdī, and that the Mahdī himself would be king of the whole world: consequently as he presumed to revolt he was deserving of death. 'Isā Khān⁷ Hajjāb who held a very confidential post, and the other Amīrs, when they saw Shaikh 'Alā'i in this displeasing attire, with ragged clothes and worn out shoes, said to Islem Shāh: "This fellow, in this condition and with this miserable appearance, wishes to take away the kingdom from us, do he imagine that we Afghāns are all corpses!"

Prior to the convening of the assembly for discussion, Shaikh 'Alā'i in accordance with his invariable custom, had expounded a few verses of the Qur'ān, and delivered such a profitable discourse, in most elegant language, comprising a criticism of the world, and a description of the last judgment, and contemptuous remarks regarding the learned men of the time, and all their faults and failings,¹ that it had the most profound effect² upon Islem Shāh and the Amīrs who were present in the assembly, notwithstanding their hardness of heart, so that it brought tears to their eyes and left them amazed and confounded. Islem Shāh then rose from the assembly, and giving the matter his own attention sent refreshments from inside the palace for the Shaikh and his companions.³ The Shaikh, however, refused to touch⁴ the food himself, and moreover when Islem Shāh entered⁵ he did not pay him any respect, and merely said to his friends: Any one who chooses may eat of it. When they enquired of him the reason of his abstaining from eating the food he replied: "Your food is due to Muslims because you have possessed more than was yours by right, contrary to the dictates⁶ of the law of Islām." Islem Shāh notwithstanding this repressed his anger, and referred the enquiry into the truth of that dispute,⁷ and the decision of that contention to the 'ulamā.

junction Islem Shāh had left Agra for the Panjāb¹ with the intention of quelling the disaffection of the Niyāzī faction; when he arrived opposite to Baiāna at the halting-place of Bahrsūr, Makhdūmu-l-Mulk said to Islem Shāh "we have earned a few days respite² from the lesser evil" by which he meant Shaikh 'Alā'i, "but the great evil, that is Shaikh 'Abdu-llah Niyāzī, who is the instructor of Shaikh 'Alā'i and the spiritual guide of the Niyāzī faction, and always remains in the hill country of Baiāna accompanied by three or four hundred men fully armed and equipped, and raises disturbances there, is still flourishing." The fire of the anger of Islem Shāh, who was thirsting for the blood of the Niyāzīs, was fanned into flame by this breath³ of suggestion, and he ordered Miyān Bahwa Lūhānī⁴ the Governor of Baiāna, who was one of the special adherents⁵ of Shaikh 'Abdu-llah, to produce the Shaikh. Miyān Bahwa went to the Shaikh and said: It seems to me to be the best course for you to hide yourself for a few days in accordance with the saying "one should avoid misfortune" and migrate from this city to some other place, then perchance the king will forget⁶ all about you and never make an attempt of this kind again,⁷ and you will have met the emergency,⁸ while I for my part shall have a good excuse.

Shaikh 'Abdu-llah would not agree to this suggestion⁹ of his, and said, "this is an arrogant monarch and Makhdūmu-l-Mulk is always watching for an opportunity. If they go still further away and then send for me it will cause me great annoyance; for this reason, seeing that he is only ten krohs distant, I had better interview him now, and as for the question of mastery here and there, it will be all one whether it is to be now or in the future, since whatever is predestined will come to pass."

Accordingly he set out by night from Baiāna, and had an interview with Islem Shāh in the morning as he was mounted ready to march, and greeted him with 'Peace be to you.' On the instant Miyān Bahwa seized him by the nape of the neck and bent his head down saying: ¹ "My friend the Shaikh this is the way they salute ² kings." The Shaikh looked savagely in his direction ³ and replied: "The salutation which is in accordance with the sunnat,⁴ and which is that which the friends of the Prophet, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him and his family, used to make,⁵ and which he, may the peace and blessing of God be upon him and his family, used to give them in response, is this very form of salutation, I know no other." Islem Shāh, with evident aversion asked: ⁶ Is this the master of Shaikh 'Alā'ī? Mulla 'Abdu-llah who was lying in wait for him said: The very man. By order of Islem Shāh he was at once seized and most unmercifully beaten with sticks, and kicked and cuffed; the Shaikh as long as he retained consciousness kept repeating this text of the sacred word "Lord forgive us our sins, and our extravagance in our affairs; and make firm our footing, and help us against the misbelieving folk!" ⁷ Islem Shāh enquired what he was saying Mulla ⁸ 'Abdu-llah said: He is calling you and the rest of us unbelievers; Islem Shāh becoming exceeding wroth waxed still fiercer in his efforts to punish and torture him,⁹ and kept his retinue standing ¹⁰ an hour longer while they cudgelled him, and when he thought that the breath had left¹¹ his body—

A spark of life however remained¹ in the Shaikh, so they wrapped him in a raw hide, and kept him warm for a night and a day before a fire, till he recovered. This occurrence took place in the year nine hundred and fifty-five. When he had regained his health he left Baiāna, and commenced travelling, and spent some time in Afghānistān (Rūh), and some time among the Afghāns of Pattan in the Panjāb,² on the confines of Bajwāra between Ambér and Amritsar,³ and was in the habit of saying: ⁴ This was the fruit of consorting with argumentative people.

But ye masters of discussion. I'll have none of you.

Finally he came to Sirhind,⁵ and giving up all connection with the manners and customs of the Mahdawī party (moreover he turned all the Mahdawī party from that faith) began to deal with all the followers of Islām according to the tenets of the orthodox school, till eventually in the year 993 H., at the time when the Emperor was on his way to Benares, he summoned Shaikh 'Abdullāh and granted him a portion of *madād-i-ma'āsh*⁶ land in Sirhind with remainder to his children. And in the year 1000 H., he bade farewell to this transitory world at the age of ninety or thereabout.

returned to Āgra, Mulla 'Abdu-llāh set about inciting him,¹ and giving him a song which reminded him of former intoxications, again induced him to summon Shaikh 'Alā'i from Hindiya, and to order punishment to be executed upon him, and spared no pains to remind him in the vilest possible way, that Shaikh 'Alā'i had been condemned to banishment, whereas now Bahār Khān had become his disciple and follower, and the whole army had shewn their leaning towards him. Seeing that his own relations had sought absolution from him and had adopted his faith, there was great probability of disturbance in the kingdom. Accordingly Islem Shāh summoned Shaikh 'Alā'i thence, and used still more strenuous exertions than before² to bring matters to a satisfactory settlement, and knowing as he did the ambitious nature of Shaikh 'Alā'i, and recognising that there was no other man among the learned men³ of Dehli and Āgra capable of settling this dispute, he therefore directed Shaikh 'Alā'i to be sent to Bihār to Shaikh Budh⁴ the learned physician, in whom Sher Khān had the very utmost confidence, and who is renowned for the authoritative commentary which he wrote upon the Irshād-i-Qāzī,⁵ and bade him act in accordance with his directions.⁶ When Shaikh 'Alā'i went thither, he heard the sound of singing and musical instruments proceeding from the rooms occupied by Shaikh Budh the physician, and saw in his assembly certain other things repugnant both to the natural feelings and⁷ to religious law⁸ also, the very mention of which is disgraceful, so felt constrained to enjoin⁹ what was lawful and to forbid what was prohibited. Since Shaikh Budh was very infirm¹⁰ and aged, and was not strong enough to speak, his family answered for him that certain customs and observances which have obtained vogue in Hindustān are of

In any case legalising incontinence was probably a less sin than legalising infidelity.² Shaikh 'Alā'i said that this is an iniquitous conjecture,³ as is proved by the fact that, whensoever worldly loss according to their belief is the result of the interference⁴ with some prohibited pleasure, and the injunction to obedience is held by them to be the cause of personal death and injury to their property and position, they have not even the fundamental properties of Muslims, so that their conformity to Islām need not even be considered. Seeing that the argument concerns the validity of Nikāḥ,⁵ why should one regret⁶ the fact of their not being Muslims? for it is said, That which is based upon iniquity is most iniquitous of all.⁷ That class therefore stand condemned. Shāikh Budh the physician however,⁸ having regard to equity became their apologist and entered a plea for them, praising⁹ Shaikh 'Alā'i and treating him with the utmost courtesy and respect.

First of all he wrote a letter to Islem Shāh in the following terms, " Seeing that the Mahdawī question is not indissolubly bound up with the faith of Islām, and very great difference of opinion exists as¹⁰ to the veritable signs by which the Mahdī is to be distin-

Here books ² are very scarce, whereas there are sure to be many ³ books in the library of the learned men of your country, let them settle the truth of the matter."

The sons of the Shaikh impressed upon him that Makhdūmu-l-Mulk ⁴ was the Ṣadru-ṣ-ṣudūr,⁵ and said, "This opposition of theirs to him has undoubtedly been the cause of your being summoned. At your great age it is far from wise for you to undertake so long a journey, and to undergo the severe fatigue incidental to it." They accordingly cancelled his first letter⁶ and, whether he would or not, secretly wrote another letter⁷ as if from Shaikh Budh, couched in terms of flattery of Mulla 'Abdu-llah, and sent it to Islem Shāh, saying, "Makhdūmu-l-Mulk is one of the most discriminating of the learned doctors of the day. What he says is the truth and his decision is the sound decision."

At the time when Islem Shāh was encamped in the Panjāb Shaikh 'Alā'i arrived at the camp of Bin Bāū; when Islem Shāh read the sealed letter of Shaikh Budh the physician, he called Shaikh 'Alā'i to come close to him and said to him in a low tone of voice, "Do you only ⁸ say to me in my own ear that you are penitent for having made this claim, you shall then be accorded complete liberty to go where you will ⁹ and do as you please." Shaikh 'Alā'i however refused to give ear to his proposals and paid no heed to him; Islem Shāh in despair¹⁰ said to Mulla 'Abdu-llāh, I leave him in your hands.¹¹ This he said, and gave orders for him to receive a certain number of stripes in his own presence.¹² Shaikh 'Alā'i himself had a wound in his neck, the result of an operation for the pestilence which raged in that year throughout the whole of Hindustān, and had destroyed the greater part of the people.¹ This wound had to be kept open by a tent,² in addition to which he was suffering from the fatigue of his journey, and had hardly a breath of life left in him, so that at the third lash his lofty soul quitted its humble frame and took its flight to the abode promised in the words "In the seat of truth, in the presence of the powerful king"³ and rested in the pleasant places of which it is said "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard neither hath it entered into the heart of man." And after his death they tied his delicate body⁴ to the feet of an elephant, and trampled him to pieces⁵ in the street of the camp, and issued orders forbidding the burial of his corpse,⁶ and appointed agents (to see to this). At that very time a vehement whirlwind arose and blew with so great violence, that people thought that the last day had arrived,⁷ and great lamentation and mourning⁸ was heard throughout the whole camp, and men were in expectation of the early⁹ downfall of the power of Islem Shāh.

years. It was in fact an exact counterpart of the affair of Sultān Jalālu-d-Dīn Fīroz Shāh Khiljī after the execution of Sīdī Maula,¹ save that the decay of the kingdom of Salīm Shāh was even more rapid than that of Jalālu-d-Dīn. People considered Mulla 'Abdūllāh, who was always vexatious to the holy men, to be the cause of all this heart-burning, and this was really the case.

This event took place in the year 957 H. (1550 A.D.) the writer of these pages was at that time ten years of age, and invented the two following chronograms: The first is Zākiru-llāh, the second Saqāhum rabbuhum sharāban.²

Among the events which happened in the reign of Islem Shāh was the murder of Khawāṣṣ Khān, of which the following is a brief account. When Khawāṣṣ Khān, after the battle with the Niyāzīs fled to the foot of the hills, Islem Shāh appointed to that district Tāj Khān Karrānī who was the brother of Suleimān Karrānī, and the most learned and able of the whole Afghān line, and wrote a command from his camp at Bin Bāū, that they were to induce Khawāṣṣ Khān, even if it were by means of treaty oaths, to come down from the hills, and put an end to him. However Tāj Khān was unable to effect³ anything owing to the impregnability of that mountain retreat, and accordingly sent Khawāṣṣ Khān the message of Islem Shāh promising him safety.⁴ He, relying upon the word of a Muslim, came⁵ and had an interview with Tāj Khān, who instantly⁶ had him put to death and sent his head⁷ to Salīm Shāh at the township⁸ of Bin (Bāū), and after burying his body⁹ at the township of Sarastu, in the neighbourhood of Sambal, transferred it thence to Dihlī. This event happened in the year 959 H. (A.D. 1551). As a chrono-

On his arrival at Kalpī in the company of Shīr Shāh he gave two laks of rupees to the sweetmeat sellers of that city so that they might send sugarcane to Rautanbhor without intermission. In the same way also he gave money to all the mango gardens of Baiāna, so that they might send mangoes day after day² to the halting-places for the poor and necessitous.

In the meantime Shīr Shāh died, and Salīm Shāh appointed persons who recovered the sum of twenty-four thousand rupees³ which remained of that money, and on receiving it put it into the treasury.

In this same year Shaikh 'Abdu-l-ḥaiyy, the son of Shaikh Jamālī Kanbāwī of Dihlī,⁴ who was adorned with excellencies of science and poetry,⁵ and was a devout man,⁶ and the boon companion and specially favoured intimate of Islem Shāh, delivered up the life entrusted to his keeping, and Saiyyid Shāh Mīr of Āgra invented the following chronogram:—
He said —

interval between two times of prayer Islem Shāh was sitting at ease upon his roadster,¹ and was proceeding with a small escort from the camp to visit the fort of Mān Garh,² which lies at a distance of five or six krohs or thereabouts, in accordance with his usual custom, when suddenly a man sprung up in front of him and blocking the road, holding a sword concealed in his armpit like the proverbial Taabaṭa Sharran,³ under pretence of seeking redress (for some grievance) came forward and aimed⁴ a blow at him. Salim Shāh, however, with great adroitness caught the blow upon the head of his whip. The handle of the whip was cut through and a slight wound was inflicted upon his face. When the man raised his arm to strike a second blow Salim Shāh sprang forward and hurled himself upon that ruffian, and wrested the sword from his hand. At this instant Daulat Khān Ajyāra, the son of Saṣāwal Khān, who was the chosen intimate and bosom friend of Islem Shāh, galloped up and dealt a blow at that miscreant. Others also came up and enquired from him the reason for his action. Salim Shāh did not approve of this⁵ and said: 'This wretch will destroy the houses of numberless people, lose no time in taking due vengeance on him.' However he recognised that sword as the one he had given to Iqbāl Khān. This Iqbāl Khān was one of the scum and off-scourings of Hindustān who had rendered Shīr Shāh several services. He was so exceedingly ill-favoured,⁶ mean-looking, and onfish in appearance that they used to call him Raḥmatu-llāhī, which in Hindustān is the term

According to the account in the Aghānī, he acquired his name from having slain a lion in a dark night in the midst of a violent storm of thunder and lightning; when morning came he brought the lion to his companions under his arm, and they said, Laqadd taabaṭa sharran; "Verily he has put destruction under his arm."

From that day forward, when he recognised that sword, he deprived him of his rank, so that⁴ he made him an example⁵ of the saying: Everything returns to its original state; but in spite of the incitation of the Amīrs of the Afghāns that he should put him to death, he replied, "I am heartily ashamed to destroy the man of my own training."⁶

After these events Islem Shāh returned¹ towards Gwāliār, which he had made his metropolis, and had arrived at Dihli² when tidings arrived that Muḥammad Humāyūn Pādshāh had reached the banks of the Indus, with the aim of conquering Hindustān. Islem Shāh just at the³ very moment when this tidings arrived, had applied a leech⁴ to his throat, but instantly took it off, dashed some water upon his head,⁵ and binding up his throat with linen rags⁶ ordered his army to proceed, and⁷ the first day covering three krohs, encamped, and the rank and file of his army who were at the last gasp from drunkenness, involuntarily followed him as though led by a halter round their necks. Certain of the Vazirs who were well-disposed to him⁸ represented that inasmuch as a powerful foe had come against him, and his soldiery were worthless, it would be just as well if orders were given for their pay to be issued to them. Islem Shāh replied that if⁹ he were to give them money at that particular time they would attribute it to his being weak and in straits, so I will wait, said he, till my return after this victory,¹⁰ when I will give them, with one stroke of the pen, two years pay. The soldiers had patience and without a murmur awaited what fortune Providence would bring them, at the same time expecting some sudden calamity,¹¹ and in spite of their state of unpreparedness arrived at the encampment. When it was reported to Islem Shāh that the artillery was ready, but that, as the bullocks¹² for the gun-carriages had been left at Gwāliār, they awaited his orders, he replied, 'What possible use are such a crowd of thousands of infantry and cavalry, are they to get their monthly pay for nothing?' accordingly he made them all do

One day he saw that Daulat Khān was absent and asked 'where can he be?' They replied he has probably gone to the house of one of his relatives. Then he knew that to all appearance he was playing a time-serving part with others. At that moment Daulat Khān arrived and Islem Shāh quoted this verse:—

Thou knowest my value, how faithful I am³

Stay! before thou seekest the companionship of other friends.

It is reported on excellent authority also that Islem Shāh had ordered⁴ the treasury-officer that he should give Daulat Khān every day for his personal expenses as much as a lak of tankas, as a matter of course and unasked,⁵ but that if asked for a larger sum he should produce it for his use. At last he left this world of regrets, wounded by countless sorrows, and abandoned his kingdom to the desire of his enemies. The duration of his reign was nine years. Moreover he lavished upon Hājī Khān magnificent carpets, and vessels of gold and silver and all other requirements on the same scale: accordingly he entered the tent without hesitation and there took up his abode. This treatment occasioned great envy and jealousy⁴ among the Amīrs of pure Afghān blood who became disheartened and spared not to express their discontent among themselves. Iskandar, who had a following of twelve thousand men, inasmuch as he estimated the army of Ibrāhīm as being more numerous than his own, shilly-shallied and made overtures for peace, and wrote a treaty in the following terms, that from Dihlī to the eastern extremity of Hindustān as far as could be arranged,⁵ should belong to Ibrāhīm Khān,⁶ and that the country of the Panjāb and Multān, as far as possible should belong to Sikandar, so that he might attain the object for which the Mughuls came to Hindustān. retracing his steps thence he proceeded by continuous marches as far as Sihrind,¹ he eventually fought a battle there and was defeated. Ibrāhīm leaving there went to Sambal, and collecting an army procured a fresh gold-embroidered canopy, and a month later crossed (the river) with a force of three² thousand sowārs by the ford of Kīstī,³ and (?) made towards Kalpī in order that having collected a fresh army,⁴ he might fight 'Adli again. Himūn proceeded by rapid marches till he joined 'Adli.¹

'Adli and Muḥammad Khān Gauria were at that time sitting down over against one another, with the river Jamna between them, at a place called Chhappar Khatta, fifteen krohs from Kalpi. 433.

Gauria, confidently relying upon his superior force to overcome the forces of 'Adli, had drawn up his cavalry and infantry and elephants to a number surpassing all computation, and was every moment² expecting victory, when suddenly the scale turned against him, and Himūn swept down upon him like a comet, and no sooner did he reach the ranks of the picked elephants after crossing the river Jamna,³ than he swooped down upon the army of Gauria, taking them unawares as does the army of Sleep, and making a night-assault gave no one time so much as to lift his hand.

They were in such utter confusion⁴ that no man knew his head from his heels, nor his turban from his shoes. The greater part of his Amirs were slain, while the remnant who escaped chastisement took to flight. The wretched Gauria was so effectually concealed that up to the present not a trace of him has been found, and all that retinue and paraphernalia of royalty⁵ and grandeur became "like the scattered moths and like flocks of carded wool,"⁶ and became in a moment the portion of the enemy. The kingdom is God's, the greatness is God's.

Just at this juncture Khizr Khān, the son¹ of Muḥammad Khān Gauria, who had been killed, succeeded his father in Kor,² issuing the currency and reading the Khutbah in his own name, with the style and title of Sultān (Muḥammad)³ Bahādur, and collecting a huge army to revenge his father's death, came up against 'Adlī, who notwithstanding his distress⁴ fought bravely on that field, and contrary to expectation met with fierce resistance. After fighting manfully 'Adlī was killed, and joined Muḥammad Khān whose life-blood was yet freshly spilled, fighting in hot blood. This event occurred in the year 962 H. and *Gauria bikusht*⁵ was its chronogram.

The assembled people raised a shout and all the skilled musicians owned their allegiance to him, and praised him exceedingly; and at the time when he was an Amīr, and as a commander of twenty-thousand held a ḡāegīr,⁸ a Bhagat boy⁹ handsome and comely who had acquired perfection in his art, used to come to his assembly from some of the villages near Badāon, and used to play.¹⁰ 'Adli was so fascinated by his beauty and skill that he kept him in his own service and took pains to educate him, giving him the name of Mujāhid Khān.¹¹ When he attained to kingly power

NASĪRU-D-DĪN MUHAMMAD HUMĀYŪN PĀD_{SH}ĀH GHĀZI,

Returning from Kābul, a second time fought a fierce battle with Sikandar, and being favoured by fortune¹ with victory and conquest, restored to the imperial throne fresh lustre, glory and fortune. The following is an epitome of these events: After that the kingdom of Hindūstan slipped from the grasp of that Pādshāh glorious as Jamshīd, like the ring from the hand of Suleimān,² and the opposition and strife between his brothers was not changed to amity and concord,³ and each one took his own way and sought his own asylum, considering his own interests by consultation with advisers, as has already been briefly related,⁴ Humāyūn crossed from the Panjāb and attempted to seize Bakkar,⁵ making his camp at the township of Lohri,⁶ which is near to Bakkar. Mirzā Hindāl having left Sind proceeded to the township of Pāntar,⁷ which is fifty krohs distant from Bakkar, on account of the abundance and cheapness of grain. Humāyūn sent a robe of honour and a horse with a message to Mirzā Shāh Husain Arghūn, governor of Tatta, saying, "I have arrived here driven by necessity and have fully determined upon the conquest of Gujrāt,⁸ and this undertaking is dependent upon your advice and guidance." Mirzā Shāh Husain spent five or six months⁹ in temporising, and brought Humāyūn by specious pretexts from the Bakkar territory to the neighbourhood of Tatta, with the intention of doing whatever might be advisable later on.

In this year, 948 H.,¹ Humāyūn married Ḥamīda Bānū Begam, and coming to Pāntar returned to Lohri. Mīrzā Hindāl started for Qandahār in answer to the summons of Qarācha Beg,² the governor of that district, and Yādgar Nāṣir Mīrzā, who had encamped at a distance of ten krohs from (Humāyūn's) camp also intended to proceed to Qandahār. Humāyūn thereupon sent Mīr Abūl-Baqā,³ who was one of the most distinguished of the learned men of the time, Persian commentator on Mīr Saiyyid Sharif, and author of other compositions, to advise him and dissuade him from his purpose, ⁴ At the time of crossing the river a party sallied out from the fortress of Bakkar and rained showers of arrows upon the people in the boats. The sainted Mīr was struck by the soul-melting arrow of Fate, and was drowned ⁵ in the ocean of martyrdom. This event took place in the year 948 H. and the chronogram Surūr-i-kāināt ⁶ was invented to commemorate it.

Mīrzā Yādgar Nāṣir hearkened to this advice and counsel and remained in Bakkar, and Humāyūn proceeded to Tatta, whereupon many of his soldiers left his camp and joined Mīrzā (Yādgar) and spent their days⁷ in comfort by reason of the increased pay they received. In this way Mīrzā gathered strength, and Humāyūn crossing the river laid siege to the fortress of Siyāhwān.⁸ Mīrzā Shāh Ḥusain kept sending⁹ reinforcements

Then he sent messengers a second time to Bakkar to summon Mirzā⁹ Yādgār Nāṣir, so that in conjunction with him he might repel Mirzā Shāh Husain and gain possession of the fort. He sent a reinforcement, which was however of no service,¹⁰ and hearing of the distress which prevailed in the camp he saw no good in going there, so remained in Bakkar.¹¹ Mirzā Shāh Husain played upon his ambition by false promises of the rule of that kingdom, and of having the Khutbah read and the currency issued in his name; he also promised to obey him, and also that he would give him his daughter in marriage, and thus misled him into

Mirzā, as a means of covering ⁶ the shame he felt, before he came to pay his respects,⁷ marched by forced marches against Mirzā Shāh Husain, and putting to death or taking captive large number of the people of Tatta, who in ignorance of his intentions had left their boats,⁸ did a good deal to repair ⁹ his former defections. Then with shame and confusion he came and had an interview (with Humāyūn) and brought in countless heads of the enemy. His faults were overlooked, but in consequence of certain events which occurred, he again became rebellious, and being deceived by the wiles of Mirzā Shāh Husain, prepared for war. Mun'im Khān who eventually became Khān-i-Khānān also meditated ¹⁰ flight. Both of them, however, became ¹¹ aware of the folly of their design, and realising its heinousness abandoned their iniquitous intention. The men of Humāyūn's force were day by day going over to the side ¹² of Mirzā Yādgār Nāṣir. In the meantime Maldeo, Rāja of the kingdom ¹³ of Mārwar, who was distinguished above all the zamīndārs of Hindūstān on account of the strength of his following ¹⁴ and his exceeding grandeur, again sent letters of summons. From Jaisalmir proceeding by forced marches to Mārwar he sent Atka Khān to ³ Māldeo, and halted for several days in the vicinity ⁴ of Jodhpūr, awaiting his arrival. Inasmuch as in those ⁵ days, Nāgor had fallen into the hands of Sher Shāh, and ⁶ had inspired Māldeo with the utmost awe of the majesty and power of Humāyūn; accordingly Māldeo, fearing the wrath of Sher Shāh,⁷ was afraid to obey that summons, and detaining Atka Khān by some trick, sent a large force under the pretence of welcoming him, with the intention of treacherously attacking Humāyūn and taking him prisoner.⁸ Atka Khān [becoming

In the very first onset the leader of the Hindūs went to hell from an arrow-wound, and a large number were killed. They could not withstand the attack, and many camels fell into the hands of the Muslims. This victory was the occasion of great rejoicing.⁴ Marching from thence and being without water,⁵ after three days they arrived at a halting-place, where, on account of its depth⁶ a drum had to be beaten at the mouth of the well, so that its sound might reach the place where the oxen for drawing the water were.⁷ For lack of water, a crowd of people in their distress were lost, and⁸ disappeared like water in that sandy plain, which was a very river of quicksand, while many horses and camels with all haste towards Bakkar. At the camp of Chaul¹ he sent for the Prince of auspicious mien, and was rejoiced by the well-omened sight of his son. His soldiers, in whose nature the craft of unfaithfulness was as firmly planted as is deceit in the nature of the times, were one by one, including even Mun'im Khān, deserting.² At this time Bairām Khān³ came from Gujrāt and tendered his allegiance. Considering it unadvisable to remain in that country Humāyūn determined to make for Qandahār. Mīrzā Shāh Husain thinking this an opportunity not to be lost, in accordance with a requisition⁴ sent thirty boats and three hundred camels, and Humāyūn crossed the river Indus. At that time Mīrzā Kāmran⁵ had taken Qandahār⁶ from Mīrzā Hindāl and had left it in charge of Mīrzā 'Askarī, and having given Ghaznin to Mīrzā Hindāl had read the Khutbah in his own name. Accordingly he gave up all idea of Qandahār and Kābul, and in opposition to his brothers, uttering the formula³ of separation, took the road to 'Irāq, accompanied by twenty-two men, among whom were Bairām Khān and Khwāja Mu'azzam. These two he sent to bring the Queen-consort and the young prince, asking Tardi Beg for the loan of a few horses, who, however, again branding himself⁴ with the stigma of meanness and disgrace, refused to comply with this request, and further declined to accompany him. Humāyūn left the young Prince, who was an infant of only one year, in the camp under the charge⁵ of Atkah Khān⁶ on account of the great heat and the scarcity of water along his route, but took the Queen-consort⁷ with him and journeyed by way of Sīstān.

Mirzā 'Askarī just then arrived at the royal camp,⁸ and alighting and tearing the veil of humanity from the face of modesty, set about appropriating the valuables. He also placed Tardi Beg⁹ in rigorous confinement, and carried off the young

These events took place in the year 950 H. (1543 A.D.). In short, leaving Sistān and journeying to the city of Khurāsān, he had an interview with Sultān Muḥammad Mīrzā, the elder son of Shāh Tahmasp, who held the rule of that country under the tutelage⁵ of Muḥammad Khān Taklū,⁶ and receiving all the necessities of royalty, and requisites for his journey,⁷ with all honour and ceremony reached the sacred city of Mashhad (Meshed); and at each successive stage, by order of the Shāh, the governors of the provinces hastened to welcome him, and made all preparations for entertaining him and shewing him hospitality, escorting him from stage to stage. The Shāh was extremely pleased, and after innumerable banquets and associations in travelling, and hunting expeditions,² arranged all preparations on a scale of regal magnificence in Humāyūn's honour, and took much trouble in giving his assent to the religious tenets of the Shī'ahs, and to that which the later writers of that persuasion say regarding the blessed companions of Muḥammad, may God be pleased with them, and Humāyūn after³ much ado said "Bring them written upon a sheet of paper." Accordingly they wrote down all their religious beliefs, and Humāyūn read them with a view to copying them, and gave precedence⁴ in the Khutbah, after the custom of 'Irāq, to the recital of the twelve Imāms.⁵ Shāh Murād, the son of the Shāh, an infant at the breast, with ten thousand⁶ cavalry under the command⁷ of Bidāgh Khān Qizilbāsh Afshār,⁸ was nominated⁹ to reinforce Humāyūn, and it was determined that the Qizilbāsh should march

Taking leave, and marching rapidly through Ardabīl and Tabriz, (Humāyūn) again went to Mashhad the holy city,² and succeeded in visiting the shrine of the fountain-head of light.³

At the time when one night he was walking alone in that sacred enclosure, one of the pilgrims said in a low voice⁴ to his fellow, "This is not Humāyūn Pādshāh."⁵ The other replied "Yes it is." Then coming close, he said in the ear of Humāyūn "So! you are again laying claim to omnipotence!" This was a reference to the circumstance that Humāyūn used generally in Bangāla to cast⁶ a veil over his crown, and when he removed it⁷ the people used to say, Light has shined forth! He also washed his sword in the river and said⁸ "Upon whom shall I gird the sword?" When he arrived at Āgra he imposed upon the populace a new self-invented form of salutation, and wished them to kiss the ground (before him). At last Mir Abūl Baqā with the Amīrs and Vazīrs paid the due respects, and the Amīrs of the Qizilbāsh coming (by another road)⁹ arrived at Garmsīr and took possession of the whole of that territory, and had encamped within view¹⁰ of Qandahār, when¹¹ after five days Humāyūn arrived, and Mirzā 'Askari was besieged, and for three months continuously¹² fighting was kept up, and a large number were daily killed on both sides. It was also currently reported that Mirzā Kāmrān was coming to the assistance of Mirzā 'Askarī, they accordingly lost heart and meditated a return to their own country.⁸ It so happened that just at that very time certain Amirs deserted from Mirzā Kāmrān, namely, Muḥammad Sultān Mirzā, Ulugh Mirzā, and Mirzā Husain Khān with other noted commanders, and offered their services to Humāyūn. With the exception of Bidāgh Khān and two or three other Amīrs,³ no one remained in the service of Mīrzā Murād, while the remaining Amīrs of the auxiliaries, all returned to 'Irāq.

Humāyūn was induced by the coming on of the winter winds, to ask Bidāgh Khān to provide shelter for the followers of his army within the walls of the city, but that inhuman being invariably sent strangely rough answers.⁴ On this account some of the Chaghatai Amīrs began⁵ to take to flight towards Kābul; among them was Mīrzā 'Askari, who was seized in the way and brought to Humāyūn, who imprisoned him. Many stirring events⁶ happened in those days, which⁷ led to the delivery of Qandahār from the hands of the Qizilbāsh. First among these was this, that the Chaghatai Amīrs urged upon Humāyūn the necessity of seizing Qandahār, on account of the coldness of the weather, saying

⁵ MS. (A) reads تبرای تندي. The word here seems to mean one who is anathema, i. e., a Sunnī.

The following long note is necessary as no book I can find explains the word تبرا Tabarrā. This word means enmity (as opposed to تولا Tuwallā, affection) and is a technical term in use among the Shī'ahs. In defining tabarrā a distinction is to be made between مخالفت mukhālafat opposition, and عداوت 'adāwat enmity, the former not necessarily involving the latter, for instance two men may be in opposition (mukhālafat) on worldly matters, and yet be in thorough amity (maḥabbat) in matters of faith, or may be opposed to one another in questions of philosophy and yet be unanimous in religious questions. Thus enmity includes opposition, but opposition does not necessarily imply enmity. And yet it is held that محبت maḥabbat, affection, and عداوت 'adāwat enmity may occasionally co-exist: for the reason that عداوت 'adāwat is of two kinds, religious, as for instance the 'adāwat of Muslims and Infidels, who regard each other as enemies on the ground of the fundamental differences in their faith: and, worldly, as the 'adāwat between one Muslim and his fellow Muslim on account of some conflict of worldly interests. Thus it is conceivable that 'adāwat and maḥabbat may co-exist. Or again one Muslim may have an affection for another Muslim quā Muslim, but entertain a hatred for him as an adulterer, while he may love even a kāfir (Non-Muslim) for his good works such as alms, &c., while he hates him as an Infidel: his love being merely of a worldly nature in no way connected with religion.

The co-existence of 'adāwat and maḥabbat in one person due to one consideration is however impossible.

Again, the 'adāwat which true believers entertain against each other on account of worldly considerations is not injurious to the faith, however reprehensible it may be.

Moreover, the essential origin of 'adāwat in religious matters is kufr (infidelity), therefore one must consider every kāfir as an enemy: thus although there may be lawful ties of worldly affection (maḥabbat) between a Muslim and a Kāfir, such as the relation of father and son, or brotherhood or other blood relationship or friendship, get all these considerations must be cast aside from the exigencies of religion, and 'adāwat must be based upon their kufr. Again religious affection is contred in īmān (faith of Islām), we must therefore from religious considerations love all the brethren of this faith whether they are obedient or contumacious.

Maḥabbat and 'adāwat between a true believer and an unbeliever (Kāfir) has different degrees, just as there are differences of degree in the love which any reasonable being entertains for his different relations. So also in religious love there are degrees The highest is that for the Prophet Muḥammad, next to this love for the assembly of believers who have close connection and intimate relation to the Prophet; and that assembly is confined to three parties: First, the children and relations of the Prophet who are his members; secondly, his pure spouses who are in a way his members; thirdly, his companions who elected to serve him and gave their lives for his cause.

If among the believers there be any devoid of faith (īmān), or guilty of any sin which destroys their former works, and in accordance with the dictates of the Qur'ān become worthy of 'adāwat (واجب العداوت) they are excepted (from the rights of maḥabbat) and enquiry should be made into their faith or absence of faith. Inasmuch as فسق fisq (immorality) does not necessarily exclude إيمان Imān (faith), it is not lawful to curse such an one, nor to display تبرا tabarrā against him, but rather to pray for his pardon; as long as he retains Imān it is lawful to entertain محبت maḥabbat for him, and 'adāwat on religious grounds is unlawful, inasmuch as tabarrā and سب sabb (reviling) are only justifiable when maḥabbat for a person no longer remains, which is restricted to death in infidelity.

Now we must consider the words of the Shī'ah divines who consider opposition to and contention regarding the Khilāfat of 'Alī as kufr, according to the words of Khawāja Naṣir Tūsī "Mukhalifūhu fasaqah wa muḥāribūhu kafarah." "Those who oppose him are immoral and those who fight against him are infidels."

Accordingly a section who have contented themselves with opposition are not deserving of tabarrā, because their extreme fault is fisq (immorality) and the fāsiq (immoral man) may be a true believer.

The above is translated from the Tuhfa-i-Isnā 'aṣḥariyah of Shāh 'Abdu-l-ʿAzīz of Dihli.

The gist of the matter appears to be this that Tabarrā is not justifiable for immorality, but only for infidelity. It seems therefore to take the place in Muslim Theology of the ἀνάθεμα of the Christian Code. It is more than excommunication, inasmuch as death in infidelity is made the test of tabarrā which thus implies final separation and curse.

The use of foul abusive language against the companions of the Prophet would be held to be loss of إيمان (Imān) and hence to render the reviler liable to تبرا tabarrā provided he died in that state. As the person referred to in the story was killed by Mīrzā Yādgar Nāṣir he is called تبرای tabarrāi accursed.

Notwithstanding this, all the inhabitants of the city, who were heartily sick of them, killed the Qizilbāsh in every street. After he had settled Qandahār to his satisfaction, ¹³ he made over charge of that district to Bāirām Khān and determined to attempt the conquest of Kābul. Mirzā Kāmrān also came out to meet him with the intention ¹⁴ of fighting. Every day one or two ¹⁵ of his noted Amirs deserted and joined the army of Humāyūn. In very truth the greater Humāyūn, upon condition of personal submission, effaced the record of his transgressions from the page of his mind with the water of forgiveness. Mīrzā, in accordance with the saying "The traitor is a coward,"³ would not consent to an interview, and took refuge in the citadel of Kābul, where he entrenched himself, and fled thence in the dead of night to Ghaznīn. The whole of his army⁴ came over to the camp of Humāyūn, who appointed Mīrzā Hindāl to pursue him, and came himself to Kābul, and the hidden meaning of the sacred word "Verily, He who hath ordained the Qur'ān for thee will restore thee to thy returning place"⁵ was revealed, and he refreshed to the full his eyes with the sight of the noble Prince his son. Suleimān Mirzā gave him battle, and was defeated, and Kāmṛān Mirzā coming up in Humāyūn's absence took possession of Kābul, placing guards over the ladies ³ of high degree, and over the young Prince.

Humāyūn, after relieving Mirzā Hindāl of the government of Badakhshān, wrote a patent conferring it upon Mirzā Suleimān, and making over ⁴ the government of that country to him returned with all speed to Kābul. Mirzā Kāmṛān, after the defeat of his forces, remained entrenched in Kābul, and when he found himself in straits, out of sheer cruelty several times gave orders for the young Prince to be placed upon the ramparts of the fort within range of both artillery and musketry fire, but Māham Ānka ⁵ made her own body a shield for him against the arrows of calamity.

The Sardārs and Amirs, on account of the heat of the contest in which they were engaged, began to traffic in hypocrisy,¹ and kept coming backwards and forwards, now in one direction now in another. Many of them on both sides were killed. At last,² Mīrzā,³ having made a hole in the wall of the fort, came out in disguise,⁴ and when Hājī Muḥammad Khān, who had been detailed with a party of men to pursue him, came up with Mīrzā,⁵ Mīrzā said to him "What if I have killed your father Bābā Qashaqa?" Hājī Muḥammad Khān, who was a veteran soldier, energetic and experienced, pretending not to understand him, returned, and the Prince reached his father Humāyūn safe and sound, and the part returned to the whole.⁶

Humāyūn agreed to this, and both friends and foes imagined that a retreat to Kābul was intended. The Osbaks took courage and followed in pursuit. III. p. 172 of the text), stigmatises his poetry as crude and wanting in originality, although he acknowledges that it possesses a peculiar quality unshared by any other author. He was skilled in astronomy, as well as in rhetoric and Sufism, and had also some skill as a composer of music. Badāonī laments the fact that notwithstanding all his advantages Kāhī spent his life in infidelity and impiety. The Atash-Kada (p. 190, Bombay Edition) says, that he sprang from the Gulistāna Saiyyids; one of his ancestors came out of the city to pay his respects to Timūr and joined his army, whose fortunes he followed until the birth of the Saiyyid aforesaid in Turkistān. He was brought up in Kābul whence he acquired his name. He went to Hindustān in the time of the Emperor Humāyūn, where he held a position of trust and honour. No date is there given for his death, which occurred in 988 H. See Āin-i-Akbarī (B) I, 566 n. 1; also Beale, O.B.D., p. 144.

Mirzā Kāmran was as a king, brave and ambitious, liberal and good-natured, sound of religion and clear of faith. He used always to associate with the 'Ulamā and learned doctors. His poems are well-known. At one time he held such strong views of probity that he gave orders to exterminate grapes from his kingdom, but afterwards became such a slave to wine that he was not ashamed of the after effects of debauch; eventually he left the world penitent and devout. All's well that ends well.²

This event took place in the year³ 964 H.

Mirzā 'Askarī, after Qarrācha Khān was slain in the last battle before Kabul, fell a prisoner into the hands of Humāyūn's soldiery, and Khawāja Jalālu-d-Dīn ⁴ Maḥmūd Dīwān conveyed him to Badakhshān and made him over to Mirzā Suleimān. He was kept in confinement for some time,⁵ and then was released, and Mirzā Suleimān despatched him to Balkh, by which route he purposed journeying to the two sacred cities.⁶ When he reached a valley which lies between Shām ⁷ and the sacred city of Makka, without accomplishing his object he hastened from ⁸ that desert to the true Ka'bah which is the bourn of all mankind. The following is the tārīkh of that event:—

454. The end of Mīrzā Hindāl was on this wise, that after Mīrzā Kāmran had suffered defeat in the final engagement, and had taken refuge with the Afghāns, and Hājī Muḥammad Khān¹ Kūki was executed² on account of his numerous misdeeds, one night Mīrzā Kāmran made a night attack upon the camp.³ By chance that night the dart of death struck Mīrzā Hindāl in a vital spot, and he drank the draught of martyrdom. This event took place⁴ in the year 958 H. and Shabkhūn was found to give the date.⁵ purging.' And his highness said: 'Give him honey to drink' and it was done. Then the man came to his highness and said: 'I gave him honey to drink, which has increased the purging,' then his majesty said to him thrice: 'Give him honey.' And the man came a fourth time and said: 'it increaseth the purging.' And his highness said: 'give him honey.' Then the man said: 'I have and it increaseth the purging.' Then his highness said: 'God has said truly, there is a cure for man in honey, and your brother's belly lied, by not accepting of the cure.' Then the man gave his brother honey to drink again and he got well."

Honey was held in high estimation as a drug among ancient physicians. The poisonous qualities of honey gathered from certain plants is well known; for instance, we find in the Mukhzanu-l-Adwiyā that honey shed by bees which have lighted in the herb Absantin (Absinthium) and the like acquires a bitter taste, and causes diseases of the stomach and liver, while another kind of honey causes fainting and cold sweats and loss of consciousness. So also the poisonous honey of Heraclea, supposed to owe its poisonous properties to the aconite plant.

Quite recently well authenticated cases of honey poisoning have been reported in the United States. The honey in one instance was found to be impregnated with gelsemine. It is generally believed that two varieties of aconite, Kalmia latifolia some Rhododendrons Azalea pontica and certain other plants of the N. O. Ericaceæ, have poisonous properties which are communicated to the honey of bees lighting on them. It is said that the Azalea pontica was the plant which yielded the poisonous honey noticed by Xenophon in his account of the retreat of the Ten Thousand. The active poison andromedotoxin has been found in many Ericaceæ. The symptoms of honey poisoning are briefly described as vomiting, purging, acute gastric and abdominal pain and cramps, with surface coldness and pallor, and the general signs of collapse. See Ind. Med. Gaz., January, 1897, p. 27. See also Med. and Surg. Rep. September, 1896.

The Afghāns could no longer protect Mirzā Kāmran, and it so happened that Mirzā went to Islem¹ Shāh; in the meanwhile the hidden purposes of Heaven were made manifest, so that after hearing the tidings of the death of Islem Shāh, and of the occurrence of extreme confusion and turmoil between the Afghāns of Hindustān and the tribal chiefs, Humāyūn definitely determined upon the attempt of the conquest of Hindustān.² In the meantime the lovers of contumacy, that is to say, the envious and riotous, so distorted the appearance of the sincere loyalty of Bairām Khān, in the clear mirror of the mind of Humāyūn, that it was inverted and he was represented by them as hostile. Accordingly an attack was ordered in the direction of Qandahār. Bairām Khān came out in person to receive³ Humāyūn and with all ceremony offered due service. Thereupon the disloyalty of his traducers became apparent. On this occasion Humāyūn was furnished, by the good offices of Bairām Khān, with the opportunity of meeting that Scion of the Walis, the offspring of the Saints, the seal of the Shaikhs of the Naqshbandī⁴ sect, Maulānā Zainu-d-Dīn Maḥmūd Kamāngar.

Humāyūn thereupon perforce carried the ewer to the Mir, who, with the utmost confusion, poured half of the entire contents of the ewer over his hands, after which the Ākhūnd without scruple washed his hands, to their heart's content. At this time Humāyūn enquired,⁴ "How much water is enjoined by the Sunnat to be poured over the hands?" They replied, "so much as is necessary to clean the hands;" then first Bairām Khān poured water over the hands of the remainder of the assembly, and was followed in this service by Husain Khān the relation of the Mahdī, son of Qāsim Khān. At last the food was eaten, and Humāyūn found very great delight in their society, and was much benefited thereby. Afterwards he sent a piece of coined gold by the hand of Bairām Khān, saying, "This is a present."⁵ Inasmuch as it was his custom not to take a present from anyone, after great deliberation he accepted it, with excessive reluctance and disgust, and in return for it sent into the presence of the king several bows of his own fashioning, with something over and above (the value of the gold) saying, "Presents⁶ must be given on both sides."

The story goes that one day Bairām Khān caused a garment to be made of handsome Kashmīr shāls,⁷ and brought it to him. He took it in his hand and praised it⁸ saying, "What a valuable thing this is!" Bairām Khān said, "As it is a suitable garment for a darvesh, I have brought it as an offering for you." He thereupon made a sign⁹ with two of his fingers, as much as to say I have two of them, come give this one to some one more deserving of it than I. Many¹ miraculous acts are related of him. Some few of these Shaikh Mu'īnu-d-Dīn, the grandson of Maulānā Mu'īn Wāiz, who by the order of the Khalifah of the time was for some time Qāzī of Lāhor, wrote in a separate treatise: among them this is written, that when archery practice was going on, he used in opposition to his usual habits to come every day² to the butts, and give instruction in archery. The youths used to urge and incite Bairām Khān to practise³ archery, saying that it would surely be useful to him some day. As a fact, the very first⁴ defeat of the Afghāns occurred in the fight at Māchīwāra,⁵ when the victory was entirely gained by the archers and in all probability that eagerness and instigation had this very end in view.

In that collection of stories also is the following, that when Bairām Khān, after making over Qandahār to Bahādur Khān the brother of 'Alī Qulī Khān Sīstānī, came to Kābul, he appointed on his own part a tyrannical Turkomān, so that the people groaned under his oppressive hand, and made many complaints to the Ākhūnd, till he became ill as they desired, and they enjoyed a few days' respite from his oppression, and used to bring tidings of him every day to the assembly of the Ākhūnd. At last one day, as one of them was⁶ saying "He has risen from his bed," the Ākhūnd also, looking him in the face, said angrily, "Perhaps he may rise on the morrow of the resurrection." Three or four days afterwards he again fell ill, and removed the disgrace of his tyranny from the world. It is a saying of their's that the Turk when sleeping is an angel, but when he sleeps the sleep

Humāyūn, at the time of his return, had some intention of taking Qandahār from Bairām Khān and giving it to Mun'im Khān. Mun'im Khān, however, represented that now that the conquest of Hindustān was on the tapis a change of governors would be a source of dissension in the army, and it would be better to wait till after conquering Hindustān, and then to act as circumstances might demand. Accordingly Qandahār was confirmed¹ to Bairām Khān, and Zamīndāwar to Bahādur Khān. Then coming to Kābul he prepared his army with transport and commissariat, and in Zū Hījjah 961 H. set out from Kābul to march against Hindustān.² And the following qiṭa'h was written which gives the date in two ways.

When they arrived at Lāhor, the Afghāns of that place also not being able to withstand him dispersed, and the commanders of the vanguard⁵ started off towards [Lāhor and Thānesar]⁶ Jalandhar⁷ and Sirhind. That country was taken possession of without any trouble; Shahbāz Khān and Naṣir Khān Afghān however fought a battle near Dipālpūr with Shāh⁸ Abū-l-Ma'ālī and 'Alī Qulī Shaibānī, who was eventually Khān-i-zamān,⁹ and was defeated. So great was the terror inspired by the Mughuls that thousands¹⁰ upon thousands of Afghāns would flee at the sight of ten of the huge-turbaned horsemen (even although they were Lāhoris), and never looked behind them. Before Humāyūn's army crossed the river Indus, Sikandar Afghān Sūr gained the upper-hand of Ibrahim Sūr, and having conquered him¹¹ formed the intention of leaving Itāwa and marching to attack 'Adlī. Suddenly, however, tidings arrived that Humāyūn had crossed the Indus, and the Afghāns, wherever they were, set about planning how to save their wives and children; however one did not help the other, each one occupied himself with his own necessities, and they knew well that it was only Islem Shāh who could successfully contend against the Mughuls, no other person had the power. Notwithstanding this however, Sikandar, in the neighbourhood of Jalandhar, first ¹ appointed ² Tātār Khān Kāsī with Ḥabīb Khān and Naṣīb Khān Taghūchī with thirty thousand cavalry, to oppose the troops under Humāyūn which had been collected in that district, and he himself came on in their rear.

See P. de C. s. v. so also Faizullāh Khān who gives only the meaning پیشانی pīshānī forehead.

The Chaghātāi Amīrs ³ crossed the river ⁴ Sutlej, and the Afghāns followed them; at sundown the two lines met and a fierce battle ensued. ⁵ The Mughuls set their hands to their bows with such effect that every arrow which they freed from the bowstring bore the message of death to the ears of one or other of the enemy, and the Afghāns, whose weapons of offence ran short, ⁶ took refuge in ⁷ a ruined village; and with the object of gaining a better view of the Mughul troops ⁸ they set fire to the roofs. ⁹ The result, however, was the very reverse ¹⁰ of what they desired, and their stratagem had this result, that the Afghāns remained in the light, while the Mughuls were in the darkness and riddled the Afghāns with arrows. slain, and horses, elephants, and spoil beyond all computation fell into the hands of Humāyūn's troops. The news of this victory reached ¹ Humāyūn in Lāhor; thus the whole of the Panjāb and Sirhind and Hissār Fīrūza was entirely ² subjugated. Thence he marched by forced marches straight for the environs of Diblī, and Sikandar Sūr with eighty thousand cavalry, and elephants of note, and a strong force of artillery, collected round him the Afghāns from every direction, and came to Sirhind, digging a trench round his cāmp ³ after the custom ⁴ of Shir Shāh. This he fortified, and took up his position; the Amīrs of Humāyūn's army holding a council of war, fortified Sirhind, and as far as they could, shewed they were prepared to defend it, and sending despatches to Lāhor begged Humāyūn to come in person, and then awaited his arrival. Humāyūn with all speed ⁵ marched and came to Sirhind, ⁶ and every day fierce contests ⁷ took place between the more venturesome spirits on both sides. Sometime passed in this way, till the day when the command of the advance-guard of the army fell to the turn of the young Prince of the world; ⁸ seizing his opportunity he drew up his line of battle. On one ⁹ side was the Prince, the Asylum of the world; and on the other side Bairām Khān, Sikandar Khān, 'Abdu-llāh Khān Osbak, Shāh Abūl-ma'ālī, 'Alī Qūlī Khān and Bahādur Khān made manly onslaughts. The Afghāns also, as far as they were able, ¹⁰ behaved with due bravery and valour, ¹¹ but could not contend ¹² against an adverse fate, and after a conflict beyond his strength Sikandar turned and fled. ¹³ The victorious hosts pursued the enemy for a long distance, reaping a rich harvest of slaughtered Afghāns; wealth and booty beyond all bounds, together with horses and countless elephants fell into their hands: then they turned back and erected with the heads of their enemies a column

No king before this time had ever been so fortunate as to attain to the glory of imperial power a second time, ³ after having suffered defeat; whereas in this case the power of God whose glory is supreme was plainly shewed. Shāh Abū-l-Ma'ālī was appointed to Hisār Firūza, but had not yet started when Qabā Khān Gang was appointed to Āgrā, 'Alī Qulī Khān to Mirāth and Sambal, and Qambar Diwāna to Badāon, and Haidar Muḥammad Khān Ākhta Begī⁵ to Baiāna. and Maulānā Qāsim Kāhī wrote as follows :—

Humāyūn, Pādshāh of the kingdom of reality,
No one remembers such an Emperor as he;
Suddenly he fell from the roof of his palace,
And from that fall his precious life was lost.
Kāhī made a calculation for the tārīkh of that event,
*Humāyūn Pādshāh az bām uftād.*⁹

the latter as being the custom of the Christians. Then Billāl was ordered to repeat Allāhu Akbar twice in a loud voice as a signal for prayer.

The forefingers were ordered to be put into the ears while repeating the Azān to strengthen the voice; probably this was due to the subjective sensation of increase of sound of the voice when the external meatus is closed. The Azān has special virtues attached to it, for those who uttered it. Thus it is said "The callers to prayer may expect paradise on the day of the resurrection," and again "Whoever acts as Mu'azzin seven years to please God, will be redeemed from hell-fire." See also Hughes' Dict. of Islam, s.v.v., see Mishkāt iv. Chapter 5, 6.

⁶ MSS. (A) (B) omit پادشاه غفران پناه.

⁷ MSS. (A) (B) دار بقا.

⁸ بهشت آمد مقام پاک او. These words give the date 963 H. The meaning is, Paradise became his pure resting-place.

⁹ همایون پادشاه از بام افتاد. The value of these letters is 963. The meaning is, Humāyūn Pādshāh fell from the roof.

The following was also found to give the date :¹

Be not ignorant of the year of his death—See!

*Humāyūn kujā raft wa iqbāl-i-ū.*²

The following tārīkh was also found :

*Ai! Ah! Pādshāh-i-man az bām uftād.*³

Verse.

That capital city of the kingdom which thou sawest is laid waste,

And that Nile of whose bounty thou heardest has become a mirage,

The sky gave the head of Muḥammad Yaḥya to ruin,

The fourth heaven became a house of mourning

The spirit of sanctity came to condole with the Sun.

His age was fifty-one years, and the duration of his reign⁴ was twenty-five years and a fraction. He was a man of kingly proportions, adorned with all excellencies and perfections, both of appearance and reality, unequalled in the sciences of astrology and astronomy and all abstruse sciences.⁵ He was the preceptor of the followers of excellence and perfection, the refuge of the seekers after piety and rectitude. Fond of poetry and⁶ of poets, he used himself to compose good verses; he never remained for an instant without the wuzū',⁷ nor did he ever

² همایون کجا رفت و اقبال او. The value of these letters is 963. The meaning is "What has become of Humāyūn and his good fortune."

³ MSS. (A) (B) insert this before the preceding tārīkh. Its value is also 963 H. and its meaning is 'Alas! Alas! my king fell from the roof.'

³ MS. (A) بر زبان براندى.

⁴ The text here gives some verses which are not found in MS. (A). They are given here as they interrupt the continuity of the text:

• قطعه •

اعتقادي درست دار چنانک - اعتمادت بدان نگرود ست
بنده را بی شک از عذاب خدای - نرھاند جز اعتقاد درست

Preserve a lively faith so that thy reliance thereon may not falter,

Nothing of a surety delivers the servant from the wrath of God save a lively faith.

MS. (B) reads

نامي اعتمادی درست دار چنانکه - اعتمادت بذات نگرود ست هرگاه

thus (11), whose letters thus arranged¹ have the same value as those of the word " Huwa." [In all matters he observed the same reverential caution which was as it were a part of his nature].² He always spent his evenings in company and was never niggardly in entertainment, the revenues of the whole of Hindustān would not have sufficed for his expenditure. His vakīls, for fear of (being thought to be greedy for) reward, would never mention the name³ of gold in his presence, and like his father he was not engrossed in amassing wealth; no improper word or term of abuse ever passed his lips, and if he were ever very wrath with any person he used just to say 'You stupid,' and not a word more.

Whether in the house or in the mosque even by mistake he never placed his left foot down before the right, and if any one placed the left⁴ foot in his house he would say, "It is the left foot," and would make him turn back and bring him in again. From his excessive reserve he never opened his lips in a smile, nor did he ever cast an angry glance at any one. They say that Shāikh Ḥamid, the commentator of Saubal, on the occasion of the conquest of Hindustān, for the second time went to Kābul to receive him, and in spite of the extreme confidence which Humāyūn had in him, one day he fell into a passion and said "My king, I see the whole of your army are Rāfiẓī⁵ (heretics)." Humāyūn replied, "Shāikh, why do you say such a thing, and what have you to say about it?" He answered "Everywhere the names of your soldiers are of this kind.⁶ I find they are all Yār 'Alī (Friend of 'Alī), or Kafsh 'Alī (Shoe of 'Alī), or Ḥaidar 'Alī (Lion of 'Alī), and I have not found a single man bearing the name of any other Companion." Humāyūn was indignant at this, and dashing his drawing pencil⁷ upon the ground in anger, said "The

¹ The value of ۛ being 5 and of و being 6, the word هو is equivalent to eleven; Two Alifs placed side by side (11) also stand for eleven.

³ MS. (A) omits نام and reads نیاوردی.

⁴ MS. (B) omits چپ.

⁵ رافضی Rāfiẓī. This term was originally applied to the Shī'ahs who joined Zaid ibn 'Alī but forsook him upon his refusing to curse Abū Bakr and 'Umar, the first two Sunnī Khalīfahs: but it came afterwards to denote any sect of Shī'ahs. MS. (B) alone reads رافضی. The Text and MS. (A) have واقضی.

⁶ MSS. (A) (B) read این مرتبه omitting در.

⁷ قلم تصویر Qalam-i-taṣwīr. Text and MS. (A) MS. (B) has تحریر tahrīr writing, instead of taṣwīr (drawing), so also a footnote variant.

Nothing of a surety delivers the servant from the wrath of God save a lively faith.

And in order to recount the many virtues of that monarch who has obtained pardon and remission, may his resting-place be happy, a separate record would be necessary. Countless³ poets, the wonder of the age, sprung from under the skirt of his auspicious reign.⁴ Among these, in Badakhshān was Maulānā Junūnī⁵ Badakhshī the enigmatist, who composed a qaṣīdah made up of thirty-eight couplets in honour of that⁶ monarch, whose refuge is the pardon of God, during the time that he was a Mirzā; and certain tours de force which had escaped the net of the qaṣīdah which Mir Saiyyid Zū-l-fiqār Shirwānī composed in honour of Khwāja Rashīd Vazīr, and the qaṣīdah of Sulmān Sāwajī which he wrote in honour of Khwāja Ghīās Vazīr, this poet⁷ seized, for example the mu'ammā,⁸ and Ighār-i-muḥmar,⁹ and the tārīkh.¹⁰ and other (tricks) of this kind, and in very truth that work of art is a veritable kāruāma (record of deeds), a miracle in the world of speech. The following are the opening couplet and another, taken from it:

¹ 'Umar Shaikh Mirzā, second son of Tīmūr, was the father of Bābar. See Āin-i-Akbarī (B) I. 299.

² MS. (A) reads بمالیمت و رفیق شیخ را بر حسن عقیدت خویش اطلاع دادند. So also MS. (B) except that را is omitted.

³ MSS. (A) (B) read بیشمار.

⁴ MS. (A) او دولت او.

⁵ Text reads جنوبی Junūbī, but MS. (A) reads جنوبی Junūnī.

⁶ MS. (B) omits آن.

⁷ MS. (B) omits او.

⁸ Mu'ammā, Enigma. A saying of which the meaning is hidden. See Garcin de Tassy, Rhetorique et Prosodie, p. 165.

⁹ See Garcin de Tassy, op. cit., p. 191.

Verse.¹

Shahanshāhā rukḥ-i-tū lāla o nasrīn lab-i-tū jān
 Hamī binam lab-i-tū ghunḥa-i-rangīn shuda khandān
 Namī gūyam khatt-i-tū sabza o raiḥān khad-i-tū gul
 Shavad zāhir qadd-i-tū fitna-i-daurān dam-i-jaulān.

And by taking all the verses of this qaṣīda after the manner of an acrostic,² the following opening couplet is formed :—³

Shahanshāh-i-dīn pādishāh-i-zamān
 Zi bakht-i-Humāyūn shuda kāmran.

While again, if the *hashw*⁴ of the two first couplets are written in red ink, the following opening couplet results, which may be read in three different metres.⁵

The following is the translation of these lines which are given in the original in the text, as the whole sense of the passage following turns upon the form and not upon the meaning of the couplets.

King of kings, thy cheek is the tulip and jasmine, thy lip is the life.
 As I look, thy lip like the bud in its redness, expands in a smile
 I say not, thy bloom is the verdure and perfume, thy cheek is the rose Life itself, from thy figure entrancing, appears in thy gait.

² توشیح Taushih. The initial letters of each verse when taken together from the couplet given. Thus in the four lines given the initial letters are ش sh ه h ن n ش sh forming Shahansh. See Garcin de Tassy, op. cit., p. 164.

³ The couplet when translated, reads :

Emperor of the faith, Pādishāh of the age,
 From thy good fortune thou hast become prosperous.

The play on the words Humāyūn and Kāmran will be observed.

⁴ The first foot of the first mīrā' (hemistich) is called ṣadr, while the last foot of the same hemistich is called 'urūz'; similarly the first foot of the second hemistich is called ibtidā, while the last foot of this hemistich is called zarb. All the feet intervening between the ṣadr and the 'urūz', or between the ibtidā and zarb, are called hashw which means literally the stuffing of a pillow (Āgīn-i-bālīsh). In the above the hashw of the verses is printed in red ink.

The scansion is as follows :—

Shahanshāhā	rukḥ-i-tū lā	la-o-nasrīn	labitū jān
Mafā'i lun	Mafā'i lun	Mafā'i lun	Mafā'i lun

The metre is thus Hazaj-i-Muṣamman.

⁵ The three metres in which these lines may be read are—

(i) Hazaj-i-muṣamman. See note 4 above.

Rukh-i-tū lāla o nasrīn khatt-i-tū sabza o raiḥān
Lab-i-tū ghuncha-i-rangīn qadd-i-tū fitna-i-daurān.¹

And if they be read in reversed order a couplet is formed which may also be referred to three several metres,² and with a change of *qāfiyah*³ and *radīf*⁴ in the following manner.⁵—

470.

Khatt-i-tū sabza o raiḥān, rukh-i-tū lāla o nasrīn
Qadd-i-tū fitna-i-daurān,⁶ lab-i-tū ghuncha-i-rangīn.

And from that which remains in black letters, a distinct opening couplet remained.⁷ Other tours de force also existed in this opening couplet, which are explained in the marginal notes to the work.

(ii) Ramal-i-muṣamman makḥbūn, and the scansion is :

زۀ و ربحان	خط تو سب	لہ و نسربن	رخ تولا
فعلا تن	فعلا تن	فعلا تن	فعلا تن

(iii) Mujtas-i-muṣamman makḥbūn : and the scansion is :

زۀ و ربحان	خطی تسب	لہ و نسربن	رخي تلا
فعلا تن	مفاعلن	فعلا تن	مفاعلن

See Elements of Arabic and Persian Prosody (Ranking) pp. 49, 67, 90.

¹ MS. (B) reads ستان in place of دوران so also footnote variant.

² The three metres are those given in note 5, on the preceding page.

⁴ ردیف Radīf is the name given to a quiescent alif following a fatha, a wāo quiescent following a zamma or a ye quiescent following a kasra, in other words it is one of the letters ا, و, ی placed as a letter of prolongation before the rawī. It is more accurately called ردف Ridf.

Thus in the lines now cited the Radīf is the letter ye in the words rangīn, and nas'rīn, whereas in the former verses the radīf was alif, as in the words raiḥān and dauran. MS. (A) omits وردیف. See also Garcin de Tassy, op. cit., p. 370.

⁵ MS. (B) omits باین طریق.

⁶ MSS. (A) (B) read بوستان būstān.

⁷ For example, we can read

Shahanshāhā lab-i-tū jān
Hamī binam shuda khandān,
Namī gūyam khad-i-tū gul
Shavad zāhir dam-i-jaulān

King of kings thy lip is life
As I look it wreathes in smiles;
I say not thy cheek's a rose
Blooming as thou passest by.

And from the four¹ couplets of a *qaṣīdah*² some of the words of which are written in red ink, the following *qita'h*³ containing the conquest of Badakhshān may be obtained, and the qita'h also has a hidden meaning, the explanation of which is obtained from certain verses extracted from these two qaṣīdahs.⁴

Qita'h.

Tū-ī Shāh-i-Shāhān-i-daurān ki shud
Hamīsha turā kār fatḥ o zafar.
Girifti Badakhshān o tārikh shud.
Muḥammad Humāyūn Shāh-i-baḥr o bar.⁵

*Rubā'i.*⁶

Until the weak body of the beggar became the dust of his threshold,
His heart on account of his sorrow and vexation, fell desolate.
The life of this helpless one left him because of desire for the beloved,
His love exceeded all bounds, if haply at that time that king might summon him.

² MS. (A) قصیده.

³ The قطعه qita'h. Must contain not less than two couplets nor more than a hundred and seventy. The first two hemistiches need not rhyme, but the second hemistich of every verse must rhyme with the final hemistich of the opening verse.

The قصیده qaṣīdah. In this form of poem the two opening hemistiches must rhyme. It must consist in Persian of not less than twenty-five couplets and not more than a hundred and seventy. See also Garcin de Tassy, Rhetorique et Prosodie for an explanation of these and other terms, and Gladwin, Dissertations.

⁴ The reading in the text and in both MSS. (A) (B) is unintelligible, we must evidently read این دو for آیند. The footnote to the text merely states that the reading in the text is found in all three MSS, but makes no attempt to explain the true reading.

⁵ محمد همایون شه بحر و بر. These words give the date 927.

The translation of these verses is :

Thou art king of the kings of the age,
Whose continual object is conquest and victory.
Then did'st seize Badakhshān, and its tārikh was Muḥammad Humāyūn king of sea and land.

⁶ MS. (A) adds مظهر muzhar.

Gūshucāra.¹

Tell the good tidings of the victory of the king of my faith. And if my life should obtain a few days grace from that exacting creditor² Death, this qaṣīdah, together with all the qaṣīdahs and such useful information as I have written down in a separate note-book in the course of my travels, shall, should opportunity offer, be included among the contents of the second volume of the *Najātu-r-Rashīd*³ which I am anxiously longing to complete, should God, who facilitates our undertakings, so will it. 471.

Another poet⁴ is Wafā'ī, by which ṣikhalluṣ Shaiḥ Zainu-d-Dīn *Khāfi*⁵ is commonly known, who was Ṣadr-i-mustaḥqill (Judge-plenipotentiary)⁶ during the reign of Bābar Pādishāh. There ¹ گوشواره Gūshucāra. Lit., earring. The first line of a ghazal or qaṣīda, following immediately upon another.

Read کو خبر فتح شد دین ما. MS. (A) کو خبر فتح شد دین نامه. A footnote variant reads.

² The following is the correct reading. Immediately after the gūshucāra
و اگر عمر روزی چند از غریب متقاضی اجل مهلت یافت این قصیده
مع سایر قصاید و فوائد که در مدت ایام سیاحی در بیاضی علیحدہ نوشته شدہ
آن فوائد فراید را الخ - MS. (A).

³ Najātu-r-Rashīd. There is a MS. of this work of Badāonī, belonging to the College of Fort William, in the Library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, No. $\frac{E}{204}$. (See J. A. S. B. xxxviii. p. 136). The title of the work gives the tārīkh of its composition on the second and last pages. The "second daftar" here mentioned by our author does not appear ever to have been written, though from his statement it would seem he had commenced the work.

⁴ MS. (A) reads دیگر وفائی کہ.

⁵ One Zainu-d-Dīn Khāfi, was a famous saint. His life is given in the Nafahātu-l-Uns, Calcutta edition, p. 569; but the one meant in this passage is the Shaiḥ Zain who read the khutbah in Dihlī in Babar's name after the battle of Pānīpat, see Firishta, Bo. Text, p. 381 and Erskine, Memoirs of Baber, p. 308.

Khāfi or Khawāfi means 'coming from Khawāf' which is a district and town in Khurāsān. Our maps have Khāff or Khāf due west of Herāt. See Āin-i-Akbarī (B) i. p. 445 and footnote, also p. 592 and footnote.

is a mosque in Agra to his memory,¹ and a school situated on the other side of the river Jamna. He was the possessor of excellencies both bodily and mental, and in the construction of enigmas and chronograms, and in extempore versification, and in all the minutiae of poetry and prose, and in rhetoric, he was unapproachable in his own age.

They say that in the very first assembly in which he made homage to Bābar Pādshāh, he asked, what is your age? Without premeditation he answered, *Qabl azīn ba panj sāl chil sālā būdam, wa hālān chihal sālā am, wa ba'd az dū sāl-i-dīgar chihal tamām mī shavad.*²

It should moreover be known that (Bābar Pādshāh) also asked (a riddle) of the author of this Muntakhab saying: *Pīsh azīn ba yak sāl panjah sālā būdam, wa hālān panjāh sālā am, wa ba'd azīn ba dah sāl panjāh sālā mī shavam.*³

It is well known that one day Shaikh Zain went to visit the brilliant resting-place of Sultān-i-Mashāikh Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya may God sanctify him, and having heard that story of the Shaikh about "Al Hidāyā mushtarak wa tanhā khushtarak"⁴ repeated this qiṭ'ah on the spot:

His duties were to enquire into the circumstances of persons before grants were made to them. Under his orders were the Qāzī and the Mīr 'Adl. See Ain-i-Akbarī, (B) I. 268-270.

² That is to say "Five years ago I was chil (چل) years of age and now I am chihal (چهل) years of age, and two years hence my chihal (forty) years will be complete.

چل (chil) stands for 33 thus چ = 3 ل = 30

چهل (chihal) stands for 38 thus چ = 3 ه = 5 ل = 30 while چهل chihal is the Persian for forty.

MS. (B) completely loses the point by reading چل chil throughout."

³ That is, A year ago I was fifty (panjah) years of age, now I am fifty-one (panjah with the addition of Alif) years of age, ten years hence I shall be (پنجاه) panjah years of age.

پنجاه (Panjah) stands for 60: thus

پ = 2 ن = 50 ج = 3 ه = 5

Apparently we should read پنجاه (Panjāh) which would give 61.

⁴ This refers to a visit paid by Amīr Khusrū of Dihlī to Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya, when he saw another visitor who had brought a present for Nizāmu-d-

Qit'ah.

Oh our Shaikh ! may there come to thee from God gifts without ceasing,

What am I that I should say "Al Hidāyā mushtarak"

Thou sayest "Tanhā khushṭarak" as thou didst say before Make it "Mushtarak" if thou dost not say

"Tanhā khushṭarak."

Verse.

Grief has seized me by the sleeve, why should I hide my head in my sleeve?

Desire has grasped my skirt, why should I withdraw my foot 472.
within my skirt?

Ah ! my sleeve in desire for thee and my skirt also are torn to rags,

Why should I hide my head in my sleeve and withdraw my foot within my skirt without thee ?¹

He wrote a tārīkh dealing with the circumstances² of the conquest of Hindūstān, and explaining its wonders, in which he did full justice to the claims of erudition.

His death occurred near Chinhār in the year 940 H. and he was buried within the precincts of a college which he himself had founded.

Another (poet) was Maulānā Nādirī-i-Samarqandī, who was one of the wonders of the age, of excellent qualities, and a compendium of perfection.³ He had a strong attachment for a beautiful youth named Nizām, and the following well-known solution of an enigmatical meaning, was composed for him :

Verse.

I the broken-hearted tell the praises of Nizām the famous,

Dīn Auliya. Amīr Khusrū exclaimed "Al hidāyā mushtarak." "The gifts are in common ;" whereupon Nizāmu-d-Dīn Auliya replied.

"Al hidāyā mushtarak lākin tanhā khushṭarak."

"The gifts are truly in common, but I should be better pleased to enjoy them alone."

² MS. (A) omits احوال.

³ MS. (A) reads وفاضل جامع بود. See Ain-i-Akbari, (B) I. 605 n.

For my heart, when absent from him, lies disordered¹ and enfeebled.

Rubā'ī.

I am grieved, and in my heart on thy account I hold a hundred sorrows,
Without the rubies of thy lips, I am matched against pain hour by hour;
I am in despair for this life, I the poor, the dejected,
I hope that the road of annihilation may become my refuge.

Gūshwāra.

I sing the praise of the locks of my beloved.
And the following verses are part of the fruit of his fertile genius.

*Ghazal.*²

How wondrous graceful is my loved one's form,
I yield myself a slave to that figure and carriage;
My loved one would not look towards me with compassion,
Perhaps she displayed an inclination towards strangers.
Nādirī! go towards the wineshop
And pledge thy head and turban for wine.

Verse.

473. Though I remained my whole life-long there at the head of thy street,
I swear by my life, that I never enjoyed a moment's peace;
Wherever I bowed my head with the intention of obeisance
Thou wert there the Ka'bah³ towards which I turned.
A whole world was admitted to intimacy, and yet I remained forlorn, ¹ نظامی Nizāme, lit. a governor, one who orders and directs. The play upon the word cannot be preserved.

² غزل Ghazal. The ghazal or ode must consist of at least five couplets but must not exceed fifteen. Its first two hemistiches must rhyme.

³ سجدہ Sajdah, commonly pronounced Sijdah, means a prostration in which the forehead touches the ground: as a religious observance the prostration, is on seven members: on the forehead, the two hands, the two knees, and the toes of both the feet; women must touch the ground with the elbows, men on the contrary must keep the elbows up. The palms of the hands

All were accepted there but I was rejected ;
 Why do you ask Nādirī, what is thy condition in that road,
 At one time I am unhappy, at another I was happy¹ there.
 He also wrote this Qaṣīdah in honour of the deceased Emperor.

Qaṣīdah.

Thanks be to God that with a settled mind
 Intimate² friends sat together in pleasure ;
 The rose-garden is the pleasure-resort of people, for there in the presence of the rose, the nightingale sorrowful at the absence of his beloved became rejoiced by its presence.
 It may be that the beloved one of the garden had been stripped naked by Autumn,
 So that she has woven a patchwork garment of the hundred petals of the rose.
 The rose and the jasmine, the spikenard and the basil are in one place,³
 See! the Emperor of Spring has come with his retinue and

There have gathered together, to secure the victory of the army of Islām,

The unrivalled warriors of his army, the brave men of his troops,

Beneath his victorious standard, on the field of Fortune,
May the favour of the Everlasting be his protector and ally.
Oh thou by the generosity of whose hand all things have their being,¹

By the sharpness of whose sword all properties both accidental and essential² obtain permanence.

In the first day of eternity, the object of creation for the Lord of the world was the evolution of thy form from this revolving sphere,

Should Gabriel a second time be the bearer of revelation,
Pure passages³ will be revealed in thy glory.

Every subtilty of science which thy ruby lip pronounces
Has become as famous in the world as the uninterrupted tradition.⁴

It is well-known that this is a commentary on the books of mathematical science, this wonderful composition of thine on the discovery of circles.

How can any one deny the vastness of thy knowledge?

None but a stubborn disputant⁶ will deny self-evident truths.

¹ قوام qiwām is the stay or support of any thing, that in virtue of which it subsists.

² اعراض و جواهر A'rāz o jawāhir. By عرض 'Araẓun, is meant in the conventional language of Muslim theologians, a thing that is not permanent, "an accident," as opposed to جوهر jauharun, "an essential," see Lane, s. v. عرض also kaṣhshāf, s. v. v. جوهر and عرض.

³ MS. (A) reads preferably آیات ظواهر for آیات طواهر.

⁴ These two lines commencing هر نکته حکمت occur in MS. (A) before the line commencing در روز ازل as well as in this place.

⁶ مكابر mukābir. One who contentiously upholds a proposition which he knows to be false.

I cannot estimate thy perfections, for in every art thou hast become perfectly skilled ;

When compared with thy philosophic intellect and good fortune, the angelic essence becomes as one of the common material¹ objects.

Thy generosity is of such a nature that at the moment of bestowing 475.

Thou knowest without asking all the hidden desires of the mind.

This enigma upon the name of Kibār² is also by him :

Verse.

That face³ is the Qur'ān, and that down on the cheek is the sign⁴ of tyranny and oppression ;

The cheek of that heart-ravishing one has no endowment of the mole of fidelity.⁵

³ The text reads آنرو with a footnote saying that all three MSS. are the same. MS. (B) reads ابرو.

⁴ The text reads آيت, MS. (B) reads آينه.

⁵ The verse in the original runs thus :

Muḥaf ast ānrū wa ān khāff āyat i jaur o jafā st

‘Ariz i ān dil-sitān bī bahra az khāl i wafā st

The word مصحف muḥaf here has two meanings, (1) a collection of pages ḥuḥuf, written upon, and placed between two boards, hence a copy of the Qur'ān, (2) affected by tashīf, which is a technical expression for so altering a word by changing diacritical points and altering the order of its component letters, that it acquires a different signification.

In accordance with this second meaning, in the word آنرو the letter و wāo is first dropped leaving آنر ānr then ر r is changed into ب b giving ابر ābr, by transposing these letters we get بار bār.

The word خط khāff has also two meanings, (1) down on the cheek, (2) a letter or character. Hence we may translate "that letter is the sign of tyranny and oppression." Now کافتن kāftan, cutting or cleaving, is such a sign, and may be represented by its root, کاف kāf, which is the letter of the alphabet required, and when prefixed to the syllable بار bār above found gives the word کبار kibār, thus completing the mu‘ammā or enigma.

The death of the aforesaid Maulānā took place in the year 966 H. and Mir Amānī Kābulī wrote the following *tārīkh*¹ of the event.

Verse.

Alas ! the pity of it, that the discerner of subtilties Nādirī has departed,

That rare poet² who did full justice to eloquence in the world ;
I sought to express the date of his death by way of enigma, Wisdom answered *one has gone from among the masters of speech.*³

Another is Shaikh Abul Wāhid⁴ Fārighī, who was deeply imbued with the feelings of a darvesh and was⁵ renowned for his sweet singing ; the following is taken from his poems :

Verse.

So great is the habitual oppression of that seeker after tyranny
That a morsel of mercy from him, seems a great beauty.
And in his impassioned style he says :

Verse.

Praise be to God that I am freed from the love of an ill-conditioned sot,
Who used to fall, as did his eyes, from drunkenness in every road,
Who, like the cup, for the sake of a draught, was lip to lip with every man,
Who like the flagon bent himself to every cup in every place.

Verse.

At that time when my heart was blest with thy companion-

It did not seem that such a blessing could be expressed ;

In short, the whole of my life's reckoning had passed in separation from thee,

Who can count the joy of meeting ! what a store of happiness it was !

Strangers last night were near you, while Fārighī at an immense distance was burning like rue¹ upon the fire of disappointment.

This is also his :

Verse.

Oh my intimate companions do not break the bond of union

In dispersion is distraction, do not break it and depart.

And again he writes :

Verse.

When thou drawest out thine arrow from my breast leave its

Grant me my heart to yield my life in thy service manfully.

His death occurred in the year 940 H, and he was buried in the monastery² of Shaikh Zainu-d-Din³ at Agra, and in consequence of the extremity of their unanimity and concord both left the world in the same year. It is said that at the time when these two eminent men went to Hindūstān, owing to their excessive profligacy they possessed nothing but an old *postīn*⁴ between them. Shaikh Zainu-d-Din⁵ said to Shaikh Abūl-Wajd,⁶ " I will take this to the bāzār of Kābul upon the condition that you won't come and indulge in any pleasantries." He agreed, and a purchaser having run it up to a most extravagant figure

At last Shaikh Abūl-Wajd came up in a disinterested way and was acting as broker, after a deal of haggling he said, Ah! you cheat! why this door mat² itself contains³ five Shahrukhis worth of fleas and lice"! so the bargain was at an end, and Shaikh Zain was annoyed and said, "What sort of time was this for the stupid jokes you are so fond of? We wanted the price of a loaf, and this is the way you're going to pay for⁴ it"! Shaikh Abūl-Wajd fell into a fit of laughter.

Another is Jāhī Yatmān,⁵ who was from Bukhārā, and having acquired a reputation on this account in Kābul, offered his services at the time when the late Emperor proceeded towards *Hindustān*⁶ obtained great favours from Humāyūn, and rose to a confidential position, and at the time when *Shāh Muḥammad Khān Sālū*⁷ was left in Kābul as revenue commissioner,⁸ he treated⁹ the Mulla just like the rest of the people, and caused him serious annoyance. The Mulla accordingly composed an elegant tarkīb

¹ The Shahrukhi was a coin equivalent to 16 dams, or 2½ to a rupee. They were so called because they were first coined by Shāh Rukh the Mughul Sultān of Persia, A. H. 807-850. Thomas, Pathan kings, p. 381. The purchaser was thus willing to give about two rupees for the postīn. The postīn is a jacket made of dressed sheepskin dyed a yellow colour and more or less handsomely embroidered in yellow silk. It is worn like Brian O'Linn's breeches "with the fleshy side out and the woolly side in." They cost about thirty or forty rupees, according to their embroidery.

² Text reads بتیل. Batil. In the text this word is followed by a (?) MS (A) has what may be پتل patal, in which case the meaning would be "a mat," and this in consideration of the matted condition of a filthy postīn seems the true reading.

Inasmuch as Humāyūn was also incensed against that ass⁴ who had been the source of all this mischief, he had that lampoon read⁵ in Sālū's presence by the Mulla in full assembly, and evinced the greatest delight and merriment, and made him give a large sum as a reward. By degrees that lampoon became more and more disgracefully scurrilous, accordingly I have restricted myself to citing one extract from it in this place, which is as follows :—

“I am the poet of Shāh Humāyūn and the dust of his thresh- 478.

Ye, beauteous ones, are all devoid of love and faithfulness,
Ye treat your captives with tyranny and oppression,
Ye promised to be faithful, but have vowed falsely,
Say truly, why are ye all thus false ?
Not in this city alone are we disgraced on your account.
Everywhere ye are the cause of our disgrace,
How often will ye ask what is your object in the world ?
I say truly that ye are, ye are, ye are.

For ye are a calamity of the calamities sent by God.

Was this the new moon ? or by reason of the leanness of their bodies,
Did the bone of the rib of the thirsty-lipped fast-enduring

Or was it that they had fashioned a saddle² for the camel of Lailī ?
Or was it the bowed body of Majnūn who had become pale and wan through grief ?
The very heaven wishes to enrol itself among thy servants,

¹ مِصْقَل miṣqal or مِصْقَلُت miṣqalut, called also خَرَزَة kharaẓat, is a shell used for polishing swords, mirrors, &c., Tājū-l-'Arūs.

MS. (B) reads مُصَقَّل muṣaqqal which suits neither metre nor sense.

² MSS. (A) (B) read خَطِيب ḫaṭīb for حَطَب. A footnote variant to the text is خَصَب.

It must be borne in mind that this verse³ Khwešh rā dar silk-i-khuddāmi tū mikhwāhad falak. (The very heaven wishes to enrol itself among your servants) he has taken from a couplet of the qaṣīdah of Nizām Astarābādī, which runs thus,—

Shab nujūm az majma'-i-mardum nishān āwarda and Waz mah i nau tāza ḥarfe darmiyān āwarda and

The following is also his :

Come, for the sky has prepared for your pastime⁴

The sun as the golden gourd; and the crescent-moon as the hook.⁵

² بسته زنگ Basta zang. The dāk-runners in the East carry a cluster of globular bells called Zang or rang, tied to one end of the staff carried over their shoulders, to the other end of which the mail-bag is attached, as a signal to clear the way. Zang-bastan has the secondary meaning of acquiring importance. MSS. (A) (B) read رنگ for زنگ.

³ MS. (A) reads این بیت را که.

⁴ قبق بازی qabaq bāzī. Qabaq signifies in Türkī a gourd; in ancient times the Turkomāns used to hang up a wooden gourd as a mark for archery, but in later times a bowl was substituted for the gourd.

⁵ کجک kajak. The name given to the hook upon which the bowl is suspended in the game of qabaq andāzī. (Qhiāṣu-l-lughāt.)

Bairām Khān has a well-known qaṣīdah with this same rhyme, but in a different metre, of which the following is the opening couplet:—

Verse.

Thy shaft has carried away the loop of the *qabaq*¹ from its hook,

Thy meteor, by the help of the crescent-moon has erased the form of the Pleiades.

These two opening couplets are derived from the opening couplet of a qaṣīdah by the celebrated Niẓārī Tūnī. The death of Mullā Jāhī took place in the year 956 H. and was due to some poison which a servant introduced into his cup.

Another poet is Ḥaidar Tūniā'ī, a man of parts and unequalled in the technicalities of harmony, he had a competent faculty for both poetry and music. He spent the greater part of his life in Hindustān. The lampoon upon the *Maliku-l-munajjimīn*² of the time of Humāyūn Pādshāh, which he wrote at Panjgāh, is one of the marvels of the age, and a rarity for all time.

The following opening couplet which he wrote for his threnody on the death of the saintly martyred Imām,³ accepted of God, murdered by man, offspring of the Prophet, by descent from the pure⁴ Fāṭimah, upon them be peace,⁵ is read during the 'Āshūrā in the assemblies for the commemoration of the death of Husain.⁶

¹ The text reads كبک kabak and a footnote states that all three MSS. have the word written with kāf-i-kaliman (ک). MS (A) however has قبق qabaq. The crescent moon is compared to an erasing-knife (محكة)

² Prince of Astrologers.

³ Husain, the second son of 'Alī by his wife Fāṭimah, daughter of Muḥammad, was slain at Karbalā, A. H. 61. See Hughes' Dict. of Islām.

With the article ال al, in its application to Fāṭimah, it denotes her distinction from other women on the ground of chastity, excellence and religion. See Lane s. v

⁵ عليه السلام 'alaihimas-salām. MS. (A) The text reads عليه السلام, with a footnote variant رضي الله عنه, and stating that the expression in the text is not found either in the dual or plural in any MS. Clearly the editor had not MS. (A) before him.

That all the kings of the age should call thee sovereign lord.

The following is also by him :—

My heart thou hast no friend to compare with sorrow for him,
Thou hast no comfort in life like sympathy for him.

And this :—

Every moment my heart's desire has some fresh allurements,
To bear her coquetry costs my life, what of that ? it is her life.

How can I liken the lips of my love to the bud of the rose,
The bud is tightly pursed, it is true, but is dumb and silent.

The son of this man Ḥaidar Tūnī was an arrant coward and spiritless ;² accordingly in the months³ of the year 985 H. he had entered the service of Humāyūn ; one day he was describing the circumstances of a journey by boat and its terrors, in such a way that the effects of fear were evident from his behaviour.⁴ I asked saying, May be you regret having gone on the Hajj ?⁵ and I repeated as appropriate to the occasion that verse which his rivals said to the poet Qudsī.⁶ 482.

¹ The pathetic story of the death of Ḥusain slain in his attempts to quench his thirst, forms the theme of the annual ceremonies of the Muḥarram. See Hughes' Dict. of Islām, artt. Muḥarram, and Al-Ḥusain, where a full account of Ḥusain's death is given.

Verse.

From the hardships of the desert path, and its thorns, ¹
Of the coming to the Ka'bah you are probably repentant.

He replied instantly, "Yea! verily." The king said, why should he repent of having visited the Ka'bah, though he may indeed repent of sitting in a ship. At that same moment Mathīn ² Khān, the elegant and accomplished mime, in accordance with a hint from the king, made himself up ³ to represent a mad man bitten by a dog, and began to bark like a dog, and seized Haidar, ⁴ and dragged him forward with his turban flying one way and his shoes another. He began running in all directions, ⁵ till at last he rolled on the ground, and set them all laughing immoderately. When he learned the truth he was desperately ashamed. The king attempted to console him, but it ended by his being obliged to leave Hindustān. Another is Shāh Tāhir Khwāndī ⁶ Dakkani, the younger brother of Shāh Ja'far; the 'Ulamā of 'Irāq, however ridicule his pretensions to descent from Khwāndī stock, and have prepared a document bearing upon this question, to which both his opponents and supporters subscribed their signatures, ⁷ as is mentioned in the Kāmilu-t-tawārīkh of Ibn Aṣīr Jazarī, ⁸ and also in the Lubbu-t-tawārīkh ⁹ of Qāzī Yahya Qazwīnī, and other works. He claimed to be intimately connected with Shāh Tahmasp, but

He is called Al-Jazarī (the islander) from his birth-place the island of Ibn 'Umar, Jazīrat ibn 'Umar, an island of the Tigris above Mosul. He was born 555 H. (1160 A.D.) and died 630 H. (1232 A.D.). See Elliot and Dowson, II. 244, and Hājī Khalīfah, 9733.

eventually he was led, by the abuse which was heaped upon him in connection with the aforesaid claim to relationship,¹ and the excessive annoyance caused him by Mir Jamālu-d-Dīn Ṣadr Astarābādī, to proceed to the Dakkan, which is famed as the refuge for the oppressed, where he met with a favourable reception from Nizām Shāh, the ruler of that country, and was rewarded with considerable advancement, and attaining the highest dignities² reached the rank of Jumlatu-l-Mulk (Chief finance-minister of the State). The Shī'ah tenets spread widely, in fact we may say they were really inaugurated in those regions through the instrumentality of Shāh Tāhir.³ Nizām Shāh Baharī, who was afflicted with an incurable⁴ malady of long standing, was cured by the virtue⁵ of a charm pronounced over him by Shāh Ja'far, and that occurrence, which was in reality was of the nature of Istidrāj, he attributed to the miraculous powers (karāmāt) of Shāh Ja'far,⁶ and acting upon his instigation abandoned the religious

³ Shāh Tāhir, by prophesying the recovery of his son 'Abdu-l-Qādir, who was dangerously ill, induced Nizām Shāh to reject the names of Abū Bakr, 'Umar, and 'Uṣmān, who are the three first Khalīfahs of the Sunnis, from the Khutbah, and to substitute those of the Imāms, thus proclaiming himself a Shī'ah. See Firishṭa, Bo. text, II. 220 et. seqq. Briggs, (III. 228) merely mentions the fact but does not give the story.

⁴ Read لا علاج له. MS. (A).

⁵ بطفيل فسون خواني. Baṭufail-i-fusūn khwānī. This is a very strange expression, and although it occurs in the text and MSS. (A) (B), I would suggest we should read بفضل ba-faṣḥ. The use of spells and charms for the cure of disease was permitted to Muslims provided there was in them no suspicion of شرك shirk, that is, of associating anything with God. We read in the Mishkāt that spells were permitted to be used "to counteract the ill-effects of a malignant eye; and on those bit by snakes or scorpions, and for sores in the side." They were also directed to be used for jaundice which was held to be an effect of the evil-eye. See Mishkātu-l-Maṣābiḥ, XXI. Part II. MS. (B) reads صحتی می دارد.

⁶ استدراج. Istidrāj. In the Kashshāf this is defined as follows: "A preternatural occurrence brought about by the agency of an unbeliever or an impious man, and in conformity with his desires." Another definition is also given from the Shamā'ilu-l-Muḥammadiyah. "Istidrāj is a preternatural occur-tenets of *Sunnat*¹ and Jamā'at,² which he held as one of the Mahdawīyah,³ and became a fanatical heretic.⁴ What cruel and vexatious treatment as accursed and excommunicate did not these two ill-starred ones⁵ inflict upon the 'Ulamā and Shaikhs of that land! So that at last their disgraceful conduct led to the expulsion of the true Muslims, and heresy⁶ from that day again became firmly rooted in that country.

Shāh Tāhir was in natural descriptive poetry comparable to Nizām Astarābādī in astronomical poetry. The following is from one of his qaṣīdahs written in eulogy of Humāyūn Pādshāh. In it he has imitated Anwarī.

Verse.

When the golden litter of the sun enters the resting-place of Hamal,⁷
The tulip lights its lamp, and the narcissus its torch;

rence brought about by the agency of infidels or evil-doers." It is generally understood that a miracle brought about by one who claims to be a prophet, if it be in accordance with his desires is called mu'jīza, while if it be contrary to his intention it is called Ihānat. Again that which is brought about by any other than a prophet, if he be faithful, pious, and perfect in the knowledge of God, is called karāmat; that performed by the ordinary believer is called ma'ānat, but that which is performed by infidels is to be called istidrāj. Kashshāf I. 463.

1 The word سنة Sunnat means literally 'a path' and the Sunnis are known as اهل سنة Ahl-i-Sunnat "the people of the path." The Sunnis have claimed for themselves this title in virtue of their acknowledging the first four Khalīfahs to have been the rightful successors of Muḥammad, and receiving the "six books" of tradition.

2 جماعة jamā'at, Assembly. It is here used in its technical sense of سنة موكدة sunnatun mu'akkadatun an authenticated traditional practice. The Sunnis are commonly called Ahl-i-sunnah wa jamā'ah.

3 For an account of the Mahdawī sect, see Āin-i-Akbarī (B.) I., pp. iii. iv.

4 مترواض غالي mutaraffiz-i-ghālī. The meaning appears to be "became more of a Shī'ah than the Shī'ahs themselves." The form of the word mutaraffiz requires some such translation.

5 میشلوم mash'ūm MSS. (A) (B) read میشلوم.

6 رفض Rafz lit. forsaking. The Sunni Muslims call all Shī'ahs Rāfiṣī or heretics.

7 حمل Hamal, Aries. The sun enters Aries in Spring.

Now the mountain is freed from the headache caused by Bahman and Dai,¹

And the spring cloud washes from its forehead the sandal.²

The following Qaṣīdah in praise of the Prophet³ is also his, although the gurīz-gāh,⁴ nay even the commencement of the Qaṣīdah in its entirety, is not suitable to the dignity of the holy 484.
Commander (of the Faithful) on him be peace.⁵

Qaṣīdah.

Once more the time has come when in accordance with the summons of the sky

The rose spreads its crimson blanket on the couch of the garden;

The clouds of Naisān, with the keen blood-hued dagger of the lightning

Erases the word "ice"⁶ from the pages of the earth's surface.

The close-eyed darlings the buds, like an army of Ozbaks,⁷

Make a night-attack at early dawn upon the army of Dai,

Behold the forms of bud and of rose with the sky for a branch!

The conical shadow of the earth is the bud, the sun in heaven is the rose.

¹ بهمن و دی Bahman-o-Dai. Dai is the tenth and Bahman the eleventh month of the Persian year: they answer to December and January. See Al-Birūnī Chronology, p. 52.

² صندل Sandal. Santalum album, N. O. Santalaceae.

The wood ground into powder is much used in India made into a paste with water as an application to the forehead in headaches. The Makḥṣan-n-l-Adwiyā recommends the addition of a little camphor and rose-water. See Ibn Baitar II, 138. See ante, p. 434 n. 1, also Drury, Useful Plants of India, p. 383.

³ منقبت Manqabat. This word is used to connote eulogy of either the Prophet or holy men (Walīs).

⁴ گریزگاه Gurīz-gāh. Point of departure. This name is given to that portion of a qaṣīdah in which the poet leaves his original theme to descant upon the qualities of the person eulogised.

⁵ MS. (A) omits تعالیٰ - and علیه السلام - حضرت

⁶ Text حرف برف ḥarf-i-barf. MS. (B) reads حرف حرف ḥarf-i-ḥarf.

⁷ The Turks are called tang-chashm close-eyed, and the red petals tightly folded in the bud are likened to the "tāj" or red caps of the Qizilbāsh.

And for this reason that the assembly of the rose may not be without a minstrel,
 The nightingale has become the lute-player, the rose-branch with its buds are the lute;
 The garment of the rock would have become wet from the moisture distilled from the clouds
 Had not the mountain covered its back with the woollen cloak¹ of verdure.
 Had not the lightning smitten its goad upon the head of the elephant-like cloud
 It would have laid in ruins the stately edifice of the sky.
 The garden became the table of 'Īsā, and the dew lying on it²
 Looked like salt sprinkled here and there upon that table,
 In order that the people may not receive base gold from the hand of the jasmine,
 The tulip cambist carries hidden under his arm the touchstone.
 Every perfect thing which is not secure from the defects of decay,
 Seems in the sight of the wise and noble but a small thing.
 The beloved of the garden is of perfect beauty but it had been well
 485. If this beauty and comeliness had not been separated from it.
 Alas! for that moment when at the instigation of desire the army of Dai
 Became emboldened³ to lay waste the garden of roses.
 The time is near at hand when the staff-bearer of the days of Autumn
 Will knock with his staff at the gate of the rose-garden.
 The crow will then hold in derision the impassioned⁴ nightingale,
 And the withered petals will lie blackened beneath the hundred petalled rose (the sun).

² Read و بروی شبنم MSS. (A) (B).

³ Text reads شیرک but we should read سترک. MS. (A).

⁴ MS. (A) reads شوریده for شوره.

The wind has cast the diadem from the head of the garden glory,¹

While the Siparak² sets itself up in antagonism to the cheek of the rose.

With a view to the construction of that courtyard of which Dai³ has laid the foundation in the garden,

Everywhere there lie scattered about bricks of ice and mortar of snow,

[For aged people who have experienced the tyranny of Autumn

The optician Dai makes spectacles of the crystal ice.

[Soon will it happen that from fear of the staff of the watchman of Dai

The people of the sweet herbs will take to flight one after another].⁴

It is better for the wise man that he determine to make the tour of such a garden

Where the autumn cannot be persuaded to go even by force.

That garden is the rose-garden of the praise of a king of so high dignity

That the very angels descend from heaven to frequent his Court.

Murtazā⁵ the king, both of form and reality, inasmuch as he is the source of the union of shadow and substance.

That one who, from the impetuosity of his royal falcon's talons, 486.

¹ بوستان افروز būstān afrūz. A red flower without odour, called also Tāj-i-Khurūs (Cockscomb) and Gul-i-Yūsuf. (Burhān-i-Qāti') Amaranthus candatus Love-lies-bleeding or Celosia cristata (Cockscomb) N. O. Amaranthaceæ.

² سپرک Siprak a herb, which when boiled dyes yellow (Steingass). This line may also be translated, Measles has become opponent to the cheek of the rose.

³ MS. (A) reads دی for گل.

⁴ This couplet is in MS. (A), as follows.—

زود باشد که از بیم کتک شهنه دی

گریزند رعایای ریاحین یک یک

The text reads پیش از اندم instead of زود باشد.

⁵ مرتضی Murtazā. The Chosen. A title of 'Ali.

Breaks the wing of the heavenly Eagle ¹ as though it were a duck.

Such a king is he that, in the train of the attendants at his door, Birjis ² bears the name Sa'd, and 'Utārid ³ that of Zīrak.

The table-steward of the sky, for the use of his lordly table,
Has brought the Pleiades ⁴ in his hand as salt-cellar and salt.
The moon has become the censer of his ⁵ assembly, and the rays of the moon,⁶

Are the smoke of the aloes-wood which issues from that censer,

From behind the mirror of the heavens, in accordance with the rules of approval,

Whatever he said, Fate repeated the same like a parrot.⁷

[Who else is there whom they can bring into his train,

We recognise his other competitors, each one of them.

He bears no relation to tyranny-loving strangers,

The connoisseur perceives the difference between turquoise⁸ and glass beads ;

¹ نسرین فلک. Nasrain-i-falak. The constellations Eagle and Lyre.

² برجیسی. Birjis. The planet Jupiter, which is one of the سعدان Sa'dan, or two auspicious planets, the other being Venus.

³ عطارد. 'Utārid. The planet Mercury, which is held to rule over intelligence, hence it has the name زیرک Zirak, intelligent.

The names Sa'd and Zīrak are commonly given to servants.

⁴ ثریا Suraiyyā. The Pleiades ; as being the most beneficial of the planets from its influence on the autumnal rains, is called by the Arabs النجم An-najm. The constellation, cf. Job. xxxviii. 31. The poet apparently draws his simile from the form of the constellation itself, and also from the nebula, which he compares to the salt grains. If this latter is really the case it would be interesting, as the nebula of the Pleiades is claimed to have been comparatively recently discovered, first by photography.

⁵ MS. (A) reads تو for وی.

⁶ The expression جرم قمر jirm-i-qamar is not very clear, and properly would hardly bear the meaning given to it in the translation. The word جرم jirm is said to be used in the sense of the separate members of the body (see Lane s. v.) and on this analogy the word is here translated rays.

⁷ The text has here a footnote saying that in two MSS. there follows here In maṭla'ī ā niz maṣhūr ast. So MS. (B).

⁸ To look each morning upon the turquoise is said to enhance the brilliancy of the eyes. It is also said that the wearer of a Turquoise so set that it

Virtual justice and the decree of courts are mistakes,
For this reason that this question was decided in the case of Faddak¹

The widow of time, since she was not meet for marriage,
He divorced her openly and irrevocably, then he left her.]²

The following opening couplet of his³ is also well-known:—

487.

Verse.

In this grief-populated world joy has departed from my sorrowful heart,⁴

We are quite accustomed to grief to such an extent has joy been forgotten.

Verse.

We have been defamed because of the crime of love, as the devotee is blamed for his hypocrisy;

Both of us are defamed, but what a vast difference there is between us?

The following is also his:—

Verse.

Come not out, for you will be the calamity⁵ of the age,
We shall be slain and you will be disgraced.

The following qaṣīdah also⁶ is a very happy production of his:—

Every man who sets his heart upon worldly desires

In the judgment of men of wisdom is not wise;

touches the skin may fall from any height without injury, as the stone attracts to itself the whole force of the blow. Mani Mālā I., p. 88. It is also supposed to change colour with the state of the wearer's health. The Turquoise is commonly worn set in an amulet.

¹ Faddak was a village which belonged to the prophet Muḥammad. After his death, when his daughter Faṭimah had assumed possession, the Khalīfah took it from her by force, saying, "I have heard the prophet say 'we prophets will not leave legacies to our heirs but what is left at our death will be given in charity.'"

² The verses in brackets are omitted from MS. (A).

³ MS. (A) omits او.

⁴ Text reads در غم آباد جهان عیش از دل ناشاد رفت. MSS. (A) (B) read در غم او لذت عشق از دل ناشاد رفت. In grief for her the joy of love has left my sorrowful heart.

⁵ MSS. (A) (B) read فتنة for شهرة. ⁶ Insert نیز از after قصیده. MS. (A).

His death occurred in the year 952 H. in the Dakkan and for the tārīkh of his decease the words *Tābi'u ahl-i-l-bait*¹ were devised.

Another is *Khawāja Aiyūb*² ibn Khawāja Abū-l-barakāt,³ who was one of the hereditary grandees of Mawarā-an-nahr. Both father and son, in spite of their excellencies acquired⁴ and inherited, have become proverbial for indifference, the one in 'Irāq and Khurāsān, and the other in Kābul and Hindustān. This Muntakhab has no room to relate their circumstances in detail, but they are related in many other places, and are well-known. It is said that *Khawāja Abū-l-barakāt*⁵ read the following *maṭla'*⁶ of one of his own poems on the learned men of the age.⁷

Verse.

The field of my hope became parched, and a famine of faithfulness followed.⁸

488. Either this was from the fire of our heart, or that in the cloud of our eye there remained no rain.

By way of fault-finding some one said to him that the yā (يا) in the last hemistich was meaningless, and in its place he should have written tā (تا). The Khawāja repeated the following qit'ah extempore by way of excuse :

Qit'ah.

Whatever comes before men of discrimination,
They do not draw lines by way of criticism.
They take the dots either above or below (as may be required)
Wise men are not bound by simple dots.
They read yā (يا) and carefully consider,
They do not read yā (يا) but make it tā (تا) in error.⁹

⁴ MS. (B) reads مكتسبي for مكتسبي. ⁵ MS. (A) again reads ابو البركة.

⁸ MS. (A) reads خشک شد کشت امید ما و شد قحط وفا.

⁹ There is great cleverness of construction in the original qit'ah, in the last line we should read بکنند bi-kunand for نکنند na kunand, and in the last but two بیروى for بیرو. MS. (A).

He also wrote a qaṣīdah in imitation of Salmān Sāwajī,¹ of which the following is the opening couplet:—

Verse.

I burn with the fever of love, and my head is racked with the pain of separation,

My soul comes to my lips, but my beloved comes not to me;

[Since the fire of my heart burns in my body like the flame in a lamp

My skirt has been rent and my garment torn upon my head].²

And the following two poems are taken from a qaṣīdah which he wrote to satirise the Qāzī of Nishāpūr:—

Verses.

A certain theologian wrote contrary to the religious law of the Prophet,³

There was nothing of that kind written in the books.

He wrote that honey is unlawful and wine lawful to be used because (said he) the latter is the juice of the vine and the former the spume of the bee.

To the wife who went⁴ to complain of her husband to the 489

Qāzī, saying I get no enjoyment of sense from him,

He replied, If he has become enfeebled and weak,

It is right that he should employ a hireling in his place.

The ^aKhawāja in his poems sometimes uses the *takhalluṣ*⁶ of Ayūb and sometimes that of Firāqī; the following ghazal is by him:—

Verse.

Lovely rose-branch, whose stature is straight as the cypress,
Thou hast twined a line of emerald around thy lips,

The last lines also mean—

Either they read and consider carefully

Or they do not read lest they should make mistakes.

¹ Salmān Sāwajī, whose surname was Jalālu-d-dīn Muḥammad, was a celebrated poet, a native of Sāwa, and flourished in the reigns of Shaikh Hasan Jalāyer and his son Sultān Aweis. He died 779 A. H. (Beale, O. B. D.)

² Not in MS. (B).

³ MSS. (A) (B) پیغمبر.

⁴ MSS. (A) (B) read رفت for برد.

⁶ Poetical name, nom-de-plume.

Thy form is straight like the letter Alif [may his shadow be lengthened),

And thine eyebrows are extended like the madda over the Alif.¹

Thou hast cast the die of acceptance on the words of others,
But through the words of lovers thou has drawn the line of refusal;

Thou endurest troubles, do not attempt to draw her, O painter of Chīn, Wert thou to draw a hundred, never would there come eyes and locks like her's.

Firāqī, be not over-desirous of the wealth of union with her;
Thou hast suffered boundless tyranny and spite at the hands of thy beloved.²

The king, who has now taken refuge in God's pardon, in spite of that unseemly behaviour was excessively fond of the Khwājah.

Accordingly, so³ desirous was he of his society that he joined him in the marriage-bond to one of the Begams, in the hope⁴ that he would adopt the manner of life of people of probity and rectitude, but the Khwājah was held so close a prisoner⁵ by his evil habits, that he could not abide companionship with the king.

Verse.

When once evil habits have taken possession of the nature
They will never leave it till the day of death.

490. He put forward various flimsy pretexts to that end, and not even contenting himself with this, one day while in the king's assembly he was guilty of a breach of decorum which one blushes to mention. The king, out of the exceeding kindness and goodness of his nature, overlooked his fault, and merely remarked, "My dear Khwāja what sort of manners are these!" The Khwāja sought permission to proceed to Makka the revered, the blessed,⁶ and after duly setting in order the requisites for his journey and the

requirements for a sea-voyage,¹ he bade him farewell. When he embarked he enquired of his companions, what² are the advantages of going thither? They replied, "Purification from past sins." He rejoined, "I will wait then till I have fulfilled the catalogue of sins, and then be purified, so that I may have no further desire to sin."³ Thus he remained destitute of that grace, and abandoning himself to his desires, gave the rein to his passions. Sultān Bahādur of Gujrāt in consideration of pleasant companionship and good-fellowship, appointed⁴ him a daily allowance of one *ashrafī*⁵ for his expenditure. One day when he was passing through the bāzār of Aḥmadābād, seeing the Khwāja in the Tirpauliya mosque,⁶ he reined back and with great kindness and empressement asked "How is the Khwāja faring?" He replied "On the fare which you have allotted me, one of my limbs even cannot obtain sufficient sustenance, why do you ask such a question?" Sultān Bahādur notwithstanding this rudeness doubled his allowance.⁷

Just at that time too Shāh Tāhir Dakkanī came to Gujrāt with all pomp and circumstance on the occasion of his embassy from Nizām Shāh Dakkanī, and having heard such high praise of the Khwāja, arrived at his house, which had neither a mat nor a pitcher of water. A very pleasant colloquy followed, each reciting his own and hearing the other's verses, and on the next ¹ ساز جهاز MS. (A). The text reads اسباب سفر و جهاز and adds a footnote saying that this is the reading of all three MSS. and also suggests that we should perhaps read سفر جهاز. MS. (A.) is however evidently correct here.

³ Read here تا ارضانی نماید. MS. (A.), instead of the reading in the text تا از بقی نماید.

⁴ MS. (A) فرمود.

⁵ The Ashrafī is a gold coin weighing ten māshas, which first obtained currency in the reign of Ashraf Pādshāh (Ghiāsu-l-lughāt).

⁶ MS. (A) reads بازار for مسجد. The word تیرپولیہ tirpauliya is a Sanskrit word, meaning having three doors. It does not appear which mosque is meant, but Hunter in the Gazetteer of India. Vol. I, pp. 97-98, speaking of the architecture of Aḥmadābād, points out the compromise of form between Hindu or Jain, and Muhammadan types. He says "Even the mosques are Hindu or Jain in their details, with a Saracenic arch thrown in occasionally, not from any constructive want, but as a symbol of Islām."

⁷ MS. (A) omits by

491. day, after arranging all the requirements of hospitality, with a khil'at, a horse, and a bag of coin and valuable gifts in his own lodging, sent the Khawāja an invitation. In the warmth of their meeting and the enthusiasm of their conversation, suddenly the conversation turned upon¹ religion and sects. The Khawāja enquired of the Shāh, what is the reason that the Shi'ahs among you say such unbecoming things regarding the companions of the Prophet on him be peace? He answered 'Our jurisconsults² have decided that cursing (la'n) is an element of faith (Imān).'³ The Khawāja rejoined, 'Curses on a faith of which cursing is an element.'⁴ The Shāh was astounded at this, and their colloquy came to an end, and that urbanity and courtesy which he had thought to shew remained hidden by the curtain of his anger, and was lost. Finally he departed thence in wretchedness and ignominy to the Dakkan, and had an interview⁵ with Nizām Shāh, who likewise sent all that was necessary to his honourable reception, and received him cordially, but neither there could the Khawāja remain, owing⁶ to his perverse temper and his want of self-restraint, till by leaving the world he freed himself from the torment of existence.

Verse.

My heart, be patient for that stern-hearted friend,
Is sitting and grieving sore⁶ at his own unhappy fate.

Verse.

Where was the black horse? whither did I wend?

Who am I, and what words are these? but what can I do, for the rein of my restive, hasty⁶ and audacious pen has been turned in this direction, and words have leapt forth beyond the area of my control. Were it not so, I know that it is no virtue to pry into faults, while to carp at the vices of others, shutting one's eyes to one's own defects is the acme of shortsightedness.

² مجتهدین Mujtahidīn. Mujtahid (one who strives) is the highest attainable title among Muslim divines. See Hughes' Dict. of Islām, s. v. and Ijmā'.

³ MS. (A) ملاقات نمودند.

⁴ MS. (A) از جهت. MS. (B) reads انجام for انجام.

⁵ MS. (A) reads خوی کشید for رونی نشیند. ⁶ MS. (A) تندرو.

The wicked sees all the vices of others,
From the pitcher that distils which it contains.¹

God He is glorified and exalted, preserves all of us from that which is wrong and improper, and as at this time² the writer has not with him a selection from the anthologies of the eloquent and learned poets, accordingly he has found it necessary to restrict himself³ to the brief mention of these few poets by way of an example.

Should this inconstant and transitory life give a few days respite, and should the days, in opposition to their usual habit afford assistance, and should Fate give its help, he will make mention of the poets of former times, and the contemporary poets of Hindūstān, especially of those whom he has seen or heard and appreciated in his own lifetime, together with extracts from their poems included in their biographies.

Mine is the endeavour, its perfection is from God.⁴ Should this not come to pass, this much will suffice as a memorial of the author.

Qitā'h.

If I remain in life, I will repair
The garment which exile has rent ;
If I should die,⁵ accept this my excuse,
Many are the hopes which crumble into dust.

¹ This proverb in one form or another is well-known. The Arabic proverb runs كل إناء ينضح بما فيه Every vessel exudes what it contains.
